Liberal Fascists - Shutting Up Business

Since the Supreme Court's January decision in Citizens United v. FEC, Democrats in Congress have been trying to pass legislation to repeal the First Amendment for business, though not for unions. Having failed on that score, they're now turning to legal and political threats.
Funny how all of this outrage never surfaced when the likes of Peter Lewis of Progressive insurance and George Soros helped to make Democrats financially dominant in 2006 and 2008.

Radio amnesty fails to lift DAB
Alert PrintRetweetFacebookScrappage scheme flatlines

Free whitepaper – The Register Guide to Enterprise Virtualization

The radio audience ratings service RAJAR has published the first full quarter of figures since the launch of a DAB trade-in scheme called 'Radio Amnesty', fronted by ubiquitous luvvie Stephen Fry. The aim was to induce households to exchange their FM radios for a DAB radio. The result? DAB's share of digital listening has fallen for the first time.

The figures tell quite a subtle story. Let's look at the annual growth trend first.

Radio listening is at an all-time record high. DAB is up 20.8 per cent year on year; but listening to the radio via telly and the internet grew faster than listening on a DAB receiver. Year on year, the digital slice of the pie grew from 21.1 per cent of listening hours in Q3 2009 to 24.8 per cent from June to September. The target set by the previous government, and adopted by the current coalition government, is 50 per cent by 2015. The rate of growth still suggests this will not be achieved in time, as we suggested back in August.

Now for the quarterly change. The promotion ran for a month and ended on 26 June. RAJAR's quarter began on 1 July - and ought to have reflected an audience uptick. Despite the promotion, however, DAB listener hours remained exactly where they were in Q2, at 162 million. So the plummy tones of Fry appear have been overshadowed by other factors, such as wider adoption of the BBC's iPlayer, or people enjoying radio through their spanking new TVs, bought for the World Cup.

There may be other reasons why the promotion didn't reflect in an audience uptake. Perhaps the discounts were not attractive enough. Perhaps it didn't receive enough retail support - DSG's Dixons and Currys outlets declined to participate. Or maybe they should have hired Hugh Grant.

You'd think the radio industry should be celebrating: the appetite for radio is tremendous, and people are seeking out new media devices with which to hear it. The fact that people are listening to radio on a TV should be particularly welcome, since it's a linear format, where advert-skipping isn't possible. But the radio industry has yoked its fortunes to DAB.

I haven't got time to read the rest, but thought I should say the Canada have never really pushed their DAB radio system.

Also having it only on L-Band probably didn't help, as that makes it very expensive to provide any reasonable coverage. I seem to remember reading that coverage was very limited, and there were sod all receivers available in the shops.

I'm in a bit too much of a hurry to read through all of this.

However, the impression I got was that trading in an FM radio only got people a small discount of a new DAB radio. Perhaps saving then 2 or 3 pounds.

Hardly an attractive offer to make people give up a perfectly good FM radio, in favour of a DAB radio that eats batteries, probably fails to get a reliable signal in most households, and provides sh*t sound quality.

Actually I haven't yet noticed any big BBC advertising campaigns for DAB so far this year. Perhaps that's why DAB seems to be failing even more than usual.

The usual massive advertising campaigns, just about managed a small growth in DAB sales. So without the advertising, DAB is an even more spectacular failure than normal.

LOL!

Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac were victims, not culprits

Posted by: Aaron Pressman on September 26, 2008

Thereï¿½s a dangerous ï¿½ and misleading ï¿½ argument making the rounds about the causes of our current credit crisis. Itï¿½s emanating from Washington where politicians are engaging in the usual blame game but this time the stakes are so high that we canï¿½t afford to fall victim to political doublespeak. In this fact-free zone, government sponsored mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac caused the real estate bubble and subprime meltdown. Itï¿½s completely false. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac were victims of the credit crisis, not culprits.

Start with the most basic fact of all: virtually none of the $1.5 trillion of cratering subprime mortgages were backed by Fannie or Freddie. Thatï¿½s right ï¿½ most subprime mortgages did not meet Fannie or Freddieï¿½s strict lending standards. All those no money down, no interest for a year, low teaser rate loans? All the loans made without checking a borrowerï¿½s income or employment history? All made in the private sector, without any support from Fannie and Freddie.

Look at the numbers. While the credit bubble was peaking from 2003 to 2006, the amount of loans originated by Fannie and Freddie dropped from $2.7 trillion to $1 trillion. Meanwhile, in the private sector, the amount of subprime loans originated jumped to $600 billion from $335 billion and Alt-A loans hit $400 billion from $85 billion in 2003. Fannie and Freddie, which wouldnï¿½t accept crazy floating rate loans, which required income verification and minimum down payments, were left out of the insanity.

Thereï¿½s a must-read study by staff members of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York analyzing the roots of the subprime crisis that came out in March. I donï¿½t think it got much attention then as the conclusions seemed uncontroversial at the time. But now that Washington politicians are trying to rewrite history, it should be mandatory reading for every American interested in knowing how we got here.

The study identifies five causes of the subprime meltdown:
-Convoluted loan products that consumers didnï¿½t understand.
-Credit ratings that didnï¿½t do a good job highlighting the risks contained in subprime-backed securities.
-Lack of incentives for institutional investors to do their own research (they just relied on the credit ratings).
-Predatory lending and borrowing (which I think means fraud perpetrated by borrowers).
-Significant errors in the models used by credit rating agencies to assess subprime-backed securities.

Youï¿½ll note in the Fedï¿½s five causes that thereï¿½s some culpability for lenders, borrowers, investors and credit raters. Thereï¿½s no blame for Freddie Mac or Fannie Mae which had little or nothing to do with the entire situation.

Itï¿½s certainly fair to criticize Fannie and Freddie over real issues that contributed to their downfall. The companies had numerous accounting problems and inadequate safeguards covering their own investment portfolios. Those weaknesses came home to roost when the real estate market cratered. Fannie and Freddie purchased billions of dollars of subprime-backed securities for their own investment portfolios and got hit just like every other investor. But itï¿½s some kind of crazy, politically inspired CYA to blame for the mess weï¿½re in.

As always, it's the cover-up that sinks people. Liberals are working overtime to cover up their role in the mortgage meltdown. Not only did they block attempts to reform Government Sponsored Enterprises (GSEs) such as Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac before they could drag down our economy, but liberals also abused the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA), turning it into a vehicle for directing loans to unqualified homebuyers.

The left knows that whoever shapes public understanding of what caused today's economic crisis can shape America's politics -- and its future -- for a great many years to come. Thus, they're pushing the notion that too little government regulation was at fault.

If the country buys this idea, liberals can enact a carbon-copy of FDR's response to the Great Depression, building a larger, more activist and ever-more-controlling federal government. They can exploit the mess by establishing a conventional wisdom that more government is the solution, rather than understanding how big government is a root cause of the current financial meltdown.

Claiming it all sprung from a lack of regulation is a half-truth, and a Yiddish proverb says a half truth is a whole lie. Over-regulation opened the money spigot by requiring lenders to make poorly underwritten loans. Under-regulation then allowed politicians to exploit that.

Although greed and dishonesty among both borrowers and lenders had major roles, the CRA and the GSEs were at the heart of what happened, setting up the now-toppled dominoes of Bear Stearns, Lehman Brothers, and others.

Over-regulation through CRA, aided by HUD, became a huge problem and, alas, wasn't even addressed in the multi-billion dollar bailout. The Clinton Treasury Department's tough new regulations in 1995 compelled the banks to engage in far-riskier lending practices or receive a failing CRA grade. To avoid an "F" from the CRA, which could jeopardize their viability, the banks were pressured to direct hundreds of billions of dollars in high-risk mortgages to inner-city and low-income neighborhoods. Moreover, under CRA pressure, banks would "hire" radical, non-profit groups like ACORN to find them customers. Once trillions of dollars began to flow, politicians and lobbyists tapped into this stream, and so did left-wing activist groups.

According to George Mason University's Russell Roberts, the CRA was buttressed by other new regulations during the Clinton Administration. As Roberts writes, "For 1996, the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) gave Fannie and Freddie an explicit target -- 42 percent of their mortgage financing had to go to borrowers with income below the median in their area. The target increased to 50 percent in 2000 and 52 percent in 2005.

For 1996, HUD required that 12 percent of all mortgage purchases by Fannie and Freddie be "special affordable" loans, typically to borrowers with income less than 60 percent of their area's median income. That number was increased to 20 percent in 2000 and 22 percent in 2005. The 2008 goal was to be 28 percent."

The banks were kept from rebelling by using Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac's deep pockets to buy these poor-quality loans and take them off the banks' books.

Under-regulation of the GSEs -- Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac -- allowed the money stream to widen and keep flowing. There has always been an implicit understanding that taxpayers would cover GSE losses and this enabled them to attract money and pour it into the CRA-induced sub-prime market. The Bush Administration had warned about this for years. Fannie and Freddie, however, could skim enough to pay for political protection, plus pay sky-high executive salaries and bonuses to well-connected political figures.

Over the past decade, Fannie and Freddie combined to spend a reported $200 million on lobbying and campaign contributions. Now bailing them out may cost taxpayers $200 billion directly, and far more indirectly.

The circle of political back-scratching centered around the theme of affordable housing, which the GSEs marketed heavily. Politicians wanted housing for low-income and poor credit risks, so they used Fannie and Freddie to further that objective, and the GSEs responded with campaign help for those politicians.

In return, politicians resisted reforms. This was demonstrated at a 2004 House hearing, where Rep. Maxine Waters (D.-Calif.) denounced attempts to stiffen oversight and regulation of this duo "so as not to impede their affordable housing mission, a mission that has seen innovation flourish, from desktop underwriting to 100 percent loans."

"Desktop underwriting" meant undocumented loans. No proof of income or credit history required. And zero down payment.

Members of both parties were involved in protecting the system. But liberal Democrats were the dominant force.

Recently, House Financial Services Chairman Barney Frank (D-Mass.) told The Boston Globe, "[Republicans'] failure to regulate sensibly … endangered the economy and … burdened it with bad stuff.… Their own philosophy blew up in their face. They were so extreme in their insistence that there be no government intervention that they have wound up provoking far more government intervention than the Democrats ever would have."

But Frank is covering up his own role because he sang a far different tune in 2003, when the Bush Administration and many Republicans (including Sen. John McCain) tried to require Fannie and Freddie to comply with Securities and Exchange Commission regulations and other additional oversight requirements. Treasury Secretary John Snow, in fact, had specifically warned Congress that Fannie and Freddie needed a new supervisory structure so that both institutions would "maintain capital and reserves sufficient to support the risks that arise or exist in its business."

Rep. Frank was unconcerned. He told a hearing, "Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are not in a crisis." Rather, he said, they were "fundamentally sound," and criticisms of them were unjustified exaggerations and "disaster scenarios." Then he confirmed why: "The more pressure there is [to regulate] then the less I think we see in terms of affordable housing"

He wanted to continue both the giveaway train supplying mortgages to those who couldn't afford them and the gravy train for politicians.

This appealed to liberals and in particular to the Congressional Black Caucus, which received six-figure support from both Fannie and Freddie in 2007.

The GSEs' major campaign largesse went to well-placed friends in key positions. The top six from 1998 thru 2008, according to the Center for Responsive Politics:

Sen. Chris Dodd (D.-Conn.) $165,400
Sen. Barack Obama (D.-Ill.) $126,349
Sen. John Kerry (D.-Mass.) $111,000
Sen. Robert Bennett (R.-Utah) $107,999
Rep. Spencer Bachus (R.-Ala.) $103,300
Rep. Roy Blunt (R.-Mo.) $ 96,950

And almost everyone in Congress got something.

The GSEs lobbied hard, too. Their combined lobbying budget averaged $17 million a year. As described by Rep. Chris Shays (R.-Conn.), "They hire every lobbyist they can possibly hire. They hire some people to lobby and they hire other people not to lobby so the opposition cannot hire them."

But friends at the top were not enough. They needed them in every community, too. The Community Reinvestment Act guaranteed a steady stream of low-quality, but highly political, loans.

Congress passed the CRA in 1977 to combat "redlining," a lending practice that prevented loans to minority communities.

Clinton Administration regulations in the '90s added teeth to CRA, requiring banks to show compliance with meeting low-income loan targets or face civil actions that could assess a $500,000 penalty for each violation. Banks were "encouraged" to comply by hiring community groups (including ACORN) who contracted with financiers to steer low-income applicants to their institutions.

As the Manhattan Institute's Howard Husock wrote in 2000: "The Senate Banking Committee has estimated that, as a result of CRA, $9.5 billion so far has gone to pay for services and salaries of the nonprofit groups involved." The left created the system that paid its community organizers very handsomely, thanks to the regulations on the financial community.

As The Heritage Foundation's J.D. Foster recently noted, "While a worthy cause, the net effect [of CRA] is often to encourage loans at lower credit standards and to encourage people to buy houses they really cannot afford."

The net effect has also brought the economy to the brink of disaster. But unless the American public is told, re-told, and educated about how we got here, there won't be reform of the bailed-out-but-still-alive GSEs nor of the CRA. Then we would witness more big government, giving us far more help than we can afford.

The Democrats are completely responsible for the collapse - Why don't you post all of the facts? You are an Obama supporter and part of the problem. If you post this (I would be suprised) viewers can go to expose obama dot com and see all of the facts in the second video. Bush tried to stop this insanity but the democrats stopped it - Also McCain was involved in trying to stop this collapse as well.

Nobody made loans "under the CRA program" CRA is not a loan program. It sets numerical targets for lending by location, race, and ethnicity. CRA often required lending to uncreditworthy persons to get a satisfactory CRA rating, and it did indeed cause Freddie and Fannie to take on huge amounts of dreck. "The chief executive of Countrywide Financial, the nation's largest mortgage lender, is said to have 'bragged' that in order to approve minority applications, 'lenders have had to stretch the rules a bit.'" See http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Community_Reinvestment_Act#Criticism and references thereto.

All pressure to reduce vetting of loan qualification has the Cumulative effect of weakening the probability for loan repayment.Pointing out there were perhaps more poorly issued loans than what CRA motivated does not lessen the importance of improving the loan quality discussion.

There never were laws that would prevent lenders from making bad loans. Nothing was deregulated by the Bush Administration in that regard. Lenders did their best to not make bad loans.

Then the Clinton Administration rewrote the CRA to REQUIRE loans be made to low credit quality borrowers. And engaged FNMA and FRE to buy these loans.

In order to make loans and homes more affordable for lower income borrowers the unusual loan products were developed. Interest only, Option ARM, and the low teaser rate products were answers to helping people who did not otherwise qualify get a home, as REQUIRED by CRA. These low standards for qualification were applied to everyone who wanted a mortgage.

Credit Default swaps are insurance for bonds. I buy insurance on most of my assets. Insurance is available for equity investments through the options market. The end result is that it can make the investment much more sound.

The problem developed when CDS written on the pools of home loans were found to be badly mispriced. Why? The borrowers did not meet the historic standards of the homeowner of the past. It was not the CDS market that caused the problem, it was the terrible result of the low underwriting standards and the high default rates that brought on.

Sir, It is not a law from 1977 (Jimmy Carter) that created the problem but rather what Mr. Clinton did to it in the 90's that caused the problem. Please read the following article from the year 2000 "The Trillion-Dollar Bank Shakedown That Bodes Ill for Cities" by Howard Husock

It appears that Mr Husocks vision has come true! Also there are related CRA articles talking about Coutrywide earmarking over $600 billion in sub prime loans in 2003!! Also add the following article from 1993 "Clinton Plan Would Soften Banking Rules" By JOHN H. CUSHMAN JR.,

This article is a joke, right?

September 30, 2008 8:10 AM
This article is incorrect in its premise.

In early 1993 President Bill Clinton ordered new regulations for the CRA which would increase access to mortgage credit for inner city and distressed rural communities. The new rules went into effect on January 31, 1995 and featured: requiring strictly numerical assessments to get a satisfactory CRA rating; using federal home-loan data broken down by neighborhood, income group, and race; encouraging community groups to complain when banks were not loaning enough to specified neighborhood, income group, and race; allowing community groups that marketed loans to targeted groups to collect a fee from the banks.

The new rules, during a time when many banks were merging and needed to pass the CRA review process to do so, substantially increased the number and aggregate amount of loans to low- and moderate-income borrowers for home loans, some of which were "risky mortgages. Banks set up CRA departments, a CRA consultant industry was created and new financial-services firms helped banks invest in packaged portfolios of CRA loans to ensure compliance. Established and new community groups began marketing such mortgages. The Senate Banking Committee estimated that as of 2000, as a result of CRA, such groups had received $9.5 billion in services and salaries. As of that time such groups also had received tens of billions of dollars in multi-year commitments from banks, including ACORN Housing $760 million; Boston-based Neighborhood Assistance Corporation of America $3 billion; a New Jersey Citizen Action-led coalition $13 billion; the Massachusetts Affordable Housing Alliance $220 million. The number of CRA mortgage loans increased by 39 percent between 1993 and 1998, while other loans increased by only 17 percent.

The CRA was public policy that DROVE the market. To cast a blind eye that obvious econic fact and simply blame "the profit motive" is ludicrous.

It is equally ludicrious to blame Wall Street and investment banks when what they did was buy up the risky mortgages that became so prevelant in the market place.

Granted, no one intened to lose money, but, to lay blame on capitalism when the real source of the problem was government in the first place indicates to me a fundamental lack of economic understanding.

This is a ridiculous article that shows a complete lack of critical analysis and honest review.

Michael Barr himself wrote about the CRA:

At its core, CRA helps to overcome market failures in low-income communities. By fostering competition among banks in serving low-income areas, CRA generates larger volumes of lending from diverse sources, and adds liquidity to the market, decreasing the risk of each bank’s loan. Encouraged by the law, banks and thrifts have developed expertise in serving low-income communities, and they have created innovative products that meet the credit needs of working families and low-income areas with manageable risks.

Why do you think subprime mortgages went from 1% of all mortgages issued to 12% within THREE years of the Clinton Administration adding new teeth to the CRA (in 1995)????

Maybe, just maybe, the subprime explosion occurred because, as professor Michael Barr says:

"By fostering competition among banks in serving low-income areas, CRA generates larger volumes of lending from diverse sources, and adds liquidity to the market, decreasingaff the risk of each bank’s loan. "

Maybe all these thrifts started giving out subprime mortgages because of all the liquidity that the CRA pumped into the subprime lending industry.

Doofus. Competition made them lend. The CRA and the GSEs put into place protected agencies that provided the environment for loose mortgages. The Fed provided the money, the CRA and GSEs provided the competition. Nature took care of the rest.

Completely disingenuous and politiaclly coloured view of the CRA and the havoc it wrought. Once the ball got rolling with CRA supervised banks making bad loans with no repurcussions and a way to bundle those bad loans up for sale so that they had more money to loan, the Ponzi scheme began in earnest. If people watch while banks do something that is completely against logic yet still works, they are going to go mad for it. And as with all good Ponzi schemes, the money keeps getting pumped into the scheme until no more takers can be found or the participants realise that the upper floors of the scheme are being constructed with material scavenged from the ground floors.

The CRA forced banks to reinvest in the poorer areas where they were taking deposits. The CRA made the loans. The world didn't end. But eventually the cracks showed in the dam but those cracks were covered over instead of repaired.

If Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac were so sound, how did they collapse I ask?

Mr Pressman is way off base. I was a bank director when sub prime lending was forced on us by the CRA act. Where did we finally wind up dumping these liabilities (called credits on our balance sheet)? It was the start of the process that eventually led to the mess we have. Every story has a beginning, and the beginning of the sub prime mess is CRA!

You are referring to mortgage brokers who have no risk in lending money under the CRA. The more they loaned, the more they made. They were able to do this because of the loosened wording of the revised CRA, changed by Bill Clinton in 1995. You are doing a serious injustice by posting such a "smokescreen" over the facts. They kept lending, Fannie and Freddie made money as they securitized those mortgages and sold them off. They made money too. The investors were left holding the worthless bag.

"The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's mortgage policies fueled the trend towards issuing risky loans. In 1995, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac began receiving affordable housing credit for purchasing mortgage bank securities which included loans to low income borrowers. This resulted in the agencies purchasing subprime securities. Subprime mortgage loan originations surged by a whopping 25 percent per year between 1994 and 2003, resulting in a nearly ten-fold increase in the volume of these loans in just nine years. As of November 2007 Fannie Mae a held a total of $55.9 billion of subprime securities and $324.7 billion of Alt-A securities in their portfolios. As of the 2008Q2 Freddie Mac had $190 billion in Alt-A mortgages. Together they have more than half of the $1 trillion of Alt-A mortgages.[82] The growth in the subprime mortgage market, which included B, C and D paper bought by private investors such as hedge funds, fed a housing bubble that later burst."

check your facts. The CRA tweak of 1995 made sub prime mortgages able to be collateralized. This Clinton initiative allowed firms outside fannie and freddie to issue the sub-prime crappy paper and then sell IT OFF THEIR BOOKS. This ability to pass it on resulted in A LOT more sub prime paper. Without the demand for the sub prime paper that was created by the CRA revision in 1995 private lenders would have issued very little of it as they would have had to keep it on their own books.

Demand for sub-prime was created by the CRA.

You didn't even mention the significant changes made to the CRA in 1995 which essentially created the sub-prime mortgage market - or at least made it a much more attractive option for lenders. Please read the article via the link below. The article was published in September of 2003. Are you certain that Bush was unaware or inactive of the issues with lending across the country, specifically with financial institutions leveraging themselves out of business? Mr. Barney Frank, back in 2003, stated publicly there was nothing wrong with Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. Odd that Mr. Frank, along with the Clinton appointed heads of Fannie and Freddie, chose to ignore the issues the Bush Administration attempted to fix.

Aaron Pressman, you are conveniently ignoring the fact that, in early 1993 President Bill Clinton ordered new regulations for the CRA which would increase access to mortgage credit for inner city and distressed rural communities. The new rules went into effect on January 31, 1995 and featured: requiring strictly numerical assessments to get a satisfactory CRA rating; using federal home-loan data broken down by neighborhood, income group, and race; encouraging community groups to complain when banks were not loaning enough to specified neighborhood, income group, and race; allowing community groups that marketed loans to targeted groups to collect a fee from the banks. The number of risky loans subsequently went up dramatically, and the real estate bubble was on its way. The problems became apparent when the bubble burst and home prices declined. Then the risky sub-prime loans started to default. Maybe the original CRA wasn't so much to blame, but the 1995 revision certainly was. So please try to consider ALL of the facts, not just those which support your narrow-minded views.

This is clearly not as cut and dry as this issue would have you believe. Bill Clinton himself stated on Good Morning America last week that the Democratic party is guilty of not listening to and accepting legislation by Republicans regarding this crisis. The power of the CRA was cut back by Bush because of all the provisions set forth by the Clinton administration. If there weren't all the loans made then then the changes wouldnt have been necessary now.

Yes but that does not mean that lending institutions that are subject to the CRA are without fault. They too wrote billions of dollars worth of loans that defaulted.

This is just another Bush/Republican hit piece designed to prop up the Democrats. In reality the CRA forces institutions to loan to people that are a credit risk.

Of course the CRA contributed to this mess! Anyone unjaded by political ideology can see that making increasingly riskier loans to more people who were less and less qualified contributed... because afterall, when you get down to it the cause of this crisis was excessive mortgage defaults. CRA and other laws created an environment in which 'no-docs' and 'stated income' were admissible as proof of creditworthiness, and greatly reduced downpayments were allowed. Sure, during the 90s, when mortgage access was increased, there weren't as many foreclosures because the market was going up, up, up. But no run-up lasts forever. Did no one consider what would happen to 120%+ LTV loans when the market topped? Did the legislators? Did the homeowners? No. So let's ease up on the class warfare and anti-Capitalism rhetoric, because K Street and Main Street are just as much to blame as Wall Street... and unless we get a functional bail-out, all streets will suffer greatly.

You're right that the CRA itself isn't to blame. It leads by a bad example, for sure, but it was weakening. Fannie and Freddie though, were created to allow people who couldn't otherwise afford mortgages to get them. The GSE's were designed to absorb more risk than a bank would be able to keep on it's balance sheet. That created, I know it's hard to believe, years ago, the start of the climate of opinion that people were somehow entitled to own a house, and being able to afford it was secondary. Americans have the right to a lot of things, but a house or a mortgage isn't one of them. I saved my pennies until I could put 20% down, and I made sure as hell that I wasn't going to buy out of my range. If people didn't expect that a multi-hundred thousand dollar burden on their personal endebtedness was simply a right of passage, we wouldn't have had people out there getting what they couldn't afford. If I had thought the government might help me pay off my mortgage, gee, I'd have bought a bigger house. Yes, the lenders are probably even MORE to blame than the borrowers, as they were somehow able to unload mortgages in security form to people who knew the math didn't work out. But when ultimately, the bad debt could be assumed by Fannie and Freddie (who were thought to be government backed) people made decisions they would not have without them as 'options.' If it was YOUR balance sheet on the line, categorically, with no chance of some other entity being able to take it from you, even when the math wasn't kosher (like the two GSE's would do) then you'd do much better to ensure that you're only buying and issuing loans to people who will be paying them back.

This article is misleading. A reduction in mortgage loan underwriting standards that started with the CRA is indeed a major contributor to the current situation. "University of Michigan law professor Michael Barr testified back in February before the House Committee on Financial Services that 50% of subprime loans were made by mortgage service companies not subject comprehensive federal supervision and another 30% were made by affiliates of banks or thrifts which are not subject to routine supervision or examinations. " While this sentence is true on it's face it is misleading. Loans were not "made" by these companies, they were originated by these companies. A lending institution funded the loan or bought a package of these types of loans from the orginiation companies. Yes, they orgiginated a lot of crap, but as long as they were able to sell the crap to FNM and FRE they had no incentive to tighten standards. The standards themselves were set low by the government engcouraging sloppy behavior. "Malinvestment" is the current economic term for this, brought on by government interference in the housing market. The politicians bought votes with bad policy, covered up problems as they arose, and are now asking the citizens of the country to bail out the bankers that foolishly underwrote or purchased these securities. All in the name of progess, growth, and political correctness. Abolish the Fed, the private U.S. banking cartel.

This is an apology piece, with several specious arguments. The CRA gave the green light to larger banks, and required them to lend to less qualified borrowers, even if normal standards had to be bent. Do you seriously believe that smaller mortgage companies would not be affected by such a policy (even if it did not, technically apply to them)? To compete, the smaller lenders would relax their standards - and then some. Also, you act as if nothing happened after 1977 until, suddenly in 2004, things went haywire. You left out the relaxation of standards pushed during the Clinton years. And, the statement that the Bush admin. weakened enforcement simply flies in the face of reality. In 2004 Bush and several Republicans, including McCain, pushed for tougher enforcement standards - against the opposition of Dems.

CRA is documented as having pressured banks to make loans to those without downpayment or proof of income to make payments so your article is not in whole truthful. Now those poor souls are losing their homes that they could never have afforded but were led to hope they could. The poor are no better off than before and CRA should be shut down and have other agencies that truly help the poor meet the need.

The biggest reason for it to continue is to promote the DNC. The biggest part of CRA is ACORN the division that has been involved in voter fraud for at least 10 years and has cases of fraud in 12 states this election alone. Just a few thought from Wiki Pedia...

In 2002 there was an inter-agency review of the effectiveness of the 1995 regulatory changes to the Community Reinvestment Act and new proposals were considered.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency put new regulations into effect September of 2005. The regulations were opposed by a contingent of Democrats.

Federal Reserve chairman Ben Bernanke has stated that an underlying assumption of the CRA – that more lending is always better for local communities – is questionable.

Economist Stan Liebowitz notes that the Fannie Mae Foundation singled out Countrywide Financial as a "paragon" of a nondiscriminatory lender who works with community activists, following "the most flexible underwriting criteria permitted." The chief executive of Countrywide is said to have "bragged" that in order to approve minority applications, "lenders have had to stretch the rules a bit." Countrywide's commitment to low-income loans had grown to $600 billion by early 2003.

Question to Business Week:

Who developed and supported the software Desktop Underwriting (DU)? (It is predominantly used to pre qualify borrowers - if they pass the software check, they are ok and Fannie/Freddie would buy the loan.) Business Week: How many loans were made approved by DU and now are bad?

How many loans made by Countrywide were bad loans?

Looks like you cherry picked wikipedia comments - Ellen Seidman’s and others and are showing just one side of the issue. I believe that Business Week may be owned by someone who doen’t want to challenge truth and wants to detract from the “real possibility” that the CRA DID have a hand in this mess…why don’t you also investigate ACORN and NACA and their terroritstic operations to fore institutions to make bad loans? Bruce Marks may not like an investigation….unless it’s from the “fair and balanced” investigation from the Business Week - right!

And doesn’t Business Week want to ask those tough questions that President Bush asked in 2003 of Fannie and Freddie:

New York Times article written by Stephen Labaton and published on September 11th, 2003: The Bush administration today recommended the most significant regulatory overhaul in the housing finance industry since the savings and loan crisis a decade ago.

Under the plan, disclosed at a Congressional hearing today, a new agency would be created within the Treasury Department to assume supervision of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, the government-sponsored companies that are the two largest players in the mortgage lending industry.

The new agency would have the authority, which now rests with Congress, to set one of the two capital-reserve requirements for the companies. It would exercise authority over any new lines of business. And it would determine whether the two are adequately managing the risks of their ballooning portfolios.

When I finally reach a definitive study on why the meltdown of the home loan fiasco causing this “blip” on the economic video monitor, I will be right that it wasn’t just one person involved that caused this issue, it was a bunch of people thinking they were smarter than reality.

This article is very one sided and doesn't go into how many people in DC tried to reign in Freddie Mac.

I do not see the purpose of bashing Bush - it solves nothing. I would expect a more thorough article by BusinessWeek what showed how many people in DC saw this, tried to pull the plug on Freddie Mac, yet were met with opposition. Furthermore, nearly 50% of the bad loans out there fell under the Community Reinvestment Act and they were guaranteed by Freddie Mac.

I suppose supporting a political agenda is more important than revealing the truth.

Fannie and Freddie took reckless chances because there was no downside. They bought up half the mortgage securities in the country for petesake.

And they donated generously to the politicians who protected them, with Barney Frank and Barack Obama their biggest beneficiaries. Telling the truth is only "political" if it's the ugly truth about corrupt liberals.

NY Times - Fannie Mae Eases Credit To Aid Mortgage Lending

Wow, are you ever wrong about this.

Calling people "know nothings" when they know more than you do is shameful. How about getting all the facts before having an opinion? Isn't that what "journalists" are supposed to do?

First of all, the CRA was significantly expanded in 1995 by the Clinton administration. They made fundamental changes to the 1977 law which - in effect - created a whole new industry of CRA "compliance" groups which were effectively community agitation groups (like Obama's ACORN). Their job was to complain when banks didn't lend enough in low-income communities, and they could even get in on the game by providing "consulting" services and marketing the loan packages.

These groups could effectively blackmail the banks by saying "loan more to our low-income community or we will agitate, threaten your CRA rating, and put your bank charter at risk."

As of 2000, these agitating groups were collecting upwards of $9.5 billion (yes, with a "b") in services and salaries. These groups - again, like ACORN - then focused efforts on "voter education" and "get out the vote" drives to elect - you guessed it - more liberals who would support CRA, Fannie and Freddie and keep the gravy train going.

From 1993 to 1998, CRA low income loans grew at more than twice the rate of ordinary mortgage loans.

Second, over time, the dangerous nexis between liberal social engineers and Fannie/Freddie got more and more dangerous. Congressional supporters of "low income housing" pressed for weaker and weaker credit standards, and used their "oversight" of Fannie/ Freddie to make it happen.

http://query.nytimes.com/gst/fullpage.html?res=9C0DE7DB153EF933A0575AC0A96F958260&sec=&spon=&pagewanted=all

Third, after the Fannie/Freddie accounting scandals of 2003-2004 which rivalled Enron, the gig was almost up as Bush and Republicans attempted to put real oversight onto the GSEs.

http://query.nytimes.com/gst/fullpage.html?res=9E06E3D6123BF932A2575AC0A9659C8B63&sec=&spon=&pagewanted=print

Oversight was defeated by Fannie/Freddie with an unprecendented lobbying effort, massive campaign contributions, and promises of even MORE "low income lending" (i.e., bad loans) to their Congressional toadies (i.e., Barney Frank and the Congressional Black Cacusus.

That was the last straw.

Fannie/Freddie effectively put out the word that they would buy virtually any loan that anyone could write. In return for standing firm AGAINST congressional oversight, their congressional sponsors were rewarded with looser standards to promote low-income housing.

Don't you get it???

And to your point, it doesn't matter who "makes" the loan; the only thing that matters is who BUYS the loans.

When Fannie/Freddie are buying any piece of s that any mortgage lender could write, lenders would be throwing money away to not write any loan they could convince any poor, illiterate sap to take.

The result? Subprime mortgages grew from <8% in 2003 to over 20% in 2006.

All thanks to Fannie/Freddie, as payback to their congressional, fully-paid-off supporters who demanded more low income housing.

Top of the list? Barack Obama. Barney Frank. And all their friends. The list is public.

This was absolute institutional corruption. Fannie/Freddie made "private" profits based on their "public" debt guarantee, gave huge contributions to congress to avoid oversight (although they are public, they are exempt from SEC Public Company oversight including public disclosures AND Sarbanes-Oxley) and allow them to make high risk investments in "low income housing" with taxpayer money.

It's also absolutely true that the easy money policies of the post 9/11 Fed contributed to this also. The negative real interest rates of these times strongly incentivized people to borrow.

But with reasonable underwriting standards and prudent risk management, it would never have gotten there.

CRA and Fannie/Freddie were promoted and put into place by the same people to the same effect. More low-income home ownership at the price of enormous risk and a bubble whose popping may yet bring down to it's knees the greatest economy in the history of the world.

Get your facts straight.

CRA is documented as having pressured banks to make loans to those without downpayment or proof of income to make payments so your article is not in whole truthful. Now those poor souls are losing their homes that they could never have afforded but were led to hope they could. The poor are no better off than before and CRA should be shut down and have other agencies that truly help the poor meet the need.

The biggest reason for it to continue is to promote the DNC. The biggest part of CRA is ACORN the division that has been involved in voter fraud for at least 10 years and has cases of fraud in 12 states this election alone. Many Americans don't like strong arm thugs taking away the value of 1 person 1 vote basis that make our elections unique in the world.

You are full of of ..it.

Clinton Administration Changes of 1995
In early 1993 President Bill Clinton ordered new regulations for the CRA which would increase access to mortgage credit for inner city and distressed rural communities.[5] The new rules went into effect on January 31, 1995 and featured: requiring strictly numerical assessments to get a satisfactory CRA rating; using federal home-loan data broken down by neighborhood, income group, and race; encouraging community groups to complain when banks were not loaning enough to specified neighborhood, income group, and race; allowing community groups that marketed loans to targeted groups to collect a fee from the banks.[3][4]

The new rules, during a time when many banks were merging and needed to pass the CRA review process to do so, substantially increased the number and aggregate amount of loans to low- and moderate-income borrowers for home loans, some of which were "risky mortgages."[citation needed] Banks set up CRA departments, a CRA consultant industry was created and new financial-services firms helped banks invest in packaged portfolios of CRA loans to ensure compliance.[citation needed] Established and new community groups began marketing such mortgages. The Senate Banking Committee estimated that as of 2000, as a result of CRA, such groups had received $9.5 billion in services and salaries. As of that time such groups also had received tens of billions of dollars in multi-year commitments from banks, including ACORN Housing $760 million; Boston-based Neighborhood Assistance Corporation of America $3 billion; a New Jersey Citizen Action-led coalition $13 billion; the Massachusetts Affordable Housing Alliance $220 million.[3] The number of CRA mortgage loans increased by 39 percent between 1993 and 1998, while other loans increased by only 17 percent.[6][7]

The Community Reinvestment Act was the seed planted by the likes of Karl Marx. Twisted into a civil rights decision in the late seventies, then pushed and reinforced into crooked law as a financial decision, was in fact a STUPID decision. Didnt work in vietnam, didnt work in cambodia, venezuela or cuba. These programs meant to help the people end up hurting the people. FOLLOW THE DAMN CONSTITUTION! because its OUR country, not theirs.

I am shocked by the lie in this article that CRA loans were made under stricter guidelines. The big banks, like Bank of America and Wells Fargo, were paying mortgage brokers an extra 1% of the loan amount for bringing in loans that helped them meet the CRA requirement. In some cases it is still going on. I used to work in a broker's office and the bank account reps pushed it as a way for the broker to double their commission. And it helped the bank meet their regulatory goals. There was no extra supervision of a CRA loan. The broker's office made more money simply because the property address fell in an area where the bank needed to meet their regulatory obligation.
And to claim that in the 1990's, when Clinton was President, that the subprime loans performed well is to ignore the simple fact that this is when the bubble started. As rates remained historically low year after year, values kept increasing beyond the ability of borrowers to qualify. The most sinister of all programs, the neg am loan was invented in the 1990s.
The Liberals have pushed and pushed for CRA, loan down payment, affordable housing to show their constituency how much they care for them. Now they are blaming Convservatives for a problem they helped create.

This guy is certainly bias and uniform. The problem is entitlement. Not everyone is entitled to anything and everything they see. Banks were forced to make bad loans and this problem goes further back than the GW Bush term. There is plenty of blame to go around and it all needs to come out in the open so these problems can be corrected and the US can move forward.

Issues are that many people got in over their heads, living outside of their means. Interest only loans, credit cards being offered to anyone who would like one. I am a manager for a small company and I find it amazing that hourly people are driving nicer cars than I have, own flat panel large screen TVs and do not think anything of extending themselves. "Entitlement" Who's left paying for those services and products that they purchased on credit when in 2 years they are having problems with a mortgage and credit cards. The house prices ran up because everyone deserves to own a house, "Entitlement" but now that they can't afford thier house, they are foreclosed on. We did no favor to these people. Now the housing prices are coming back in-line to where they were.
I am entitled to what I can afford and what I need. Nothing else.

"Just the idea that a lending crisis created from 2004 to 2007 was caused by a 1977 law is silly."

No, there is nothing "silly" about it. A law's strength cannot be intensified well after it was passed? It cannot be used to further its goals well after it is passed?

You sling some "facts" around, but you can't back them up. The truth is, CRA made it so that banks were forced to give a certain percentage of these loans or they would not get their due. I am a realtor, and I have some experience with the Acorn product. My buyers were encouraged to borrow more with Acorn than any other lender in the area would let them. They were reasonable people and were'nt comfortable with the payment so reigned themselves in to a lower amount. Unfortunately many starry-eyed borrowers didn't.

Hey Aaron are you a complete idiot? You have to be if you start this article out with the title "community reinvestment act had nothing to do with the subprime crisis", when the fact of the matter is that it started with it. You have no understanding of economics is you think that "bubbles" of any kind start and blow up in just three years or so. "Bubbles" such as real estate in this case take many many years to form and was a combination of various public policies and private malinvestment.When you look at the facts you have to be lying to your self. The Clinton adminstration put a lot of pressure on the financial instutions to "lend" more money to CRA's banks and in a similar move in 1999 he demanded that Fannie Mae lossen their lending standards in the subprime market! 1999 Aaron , remember bubbles take time to form , if you don't understand that. Here is a direct quote from the New York Times dated Sept. 30th 1999, "Fannie Mae, the nation's biggest underwriter of home mortgages, has been under increasing pressure from the Clinton Administration to expand mortgage loans among low and moderate income people and felt pressure from stock holders to maintain its phenomenal growth in profits.

In addition, banks, thrift institutions and mortgage companies have been pressing Fannie Mae to help them make more loans to so-called subprime borrowers. These borrowers whose incomes, credit ratings and savings are not good enough to qualify for conventional loans, can only get loans from finance companies that charge much higher interest rates -- anywhere from three to four percentage points higher than conventional loans." You people love to twist numbers by saying that the majority of subprime loans that have defaulted are from non regulated non CRA banks , but that is a misleading stat because the two major players in this at the begining was Countrywide and Bear Stearns.They were two major financial instutions, who, oh by the way were some of the first to go belly up that were involved with the genusis of this from the start under what adminstration..The Clinton adminstration!! Its funny because between 1993 and 1998 CRA mortgage loans increased by 39 percent between , while other loans increased by only 17 percent.Again bubbles , you can build a straw argument that the loans that caused this mess were delevered between 2003 and 2007 but you still can not say that the title of your silly article is true. You need to understand that sub prime crisis is way more complecated than you are leading your readers to believe. Stating that the CRA had nothing to do with the crisis, when it clearly has is just a joke!!LOL Goverment has to take responcibility for this mess and both parties have their hands in the mess as well! Time for a responsible pro market way out of this mess! How about a strong Dollar? How about real change !!!

Studies have found that CRA improved access to home mortgage credit for low-income borrowers during the 1990s, as CRA regulatory intensity increased.4 Between 1993 and 1999, depository institutions covered by the CRA and their affiliates made over $800 billion in home mortgage, small business, and community development loans to low- and moderate-income borrowers and communities.5 The number of CRA-eligible mortgage loans increased by 39 percent between 1993 and 1998, while other loans increased by only 17 percent. Even excluding affiliates, banks increased their lending to low- and moderate-income borrowers and areas by 10 percent over this period, compared with no growth at all for these lenders in their other markets. As a result, the share of all mortgage lending by CRA-covered institutions and their affiliates to these borrowers and areas increased from 25 to 28 percent.

Weren't banks sued by liberal interest groups & lawyers (such as Obama [Miner, Barnhill & Galland]) for not issuing enough sub-prime loans, which these banks knew couldn't/wouldn't be paid back? In other words, banks were forced to make these loans or else be taken to court. Your idiotic editorial seems to imply that, for example, bank robbers aren't to blame, rather it's the shortage of policemen who are at fault.

"CRA loans carried lower rates than other subprime loans and were less likely to end up securitized into the mortgage-backed securities that have caused so many losses, according to a recent study by the law firm Traiger & Hinckley" If they were not secure, and it falls under the CRA, HELLO!!!!

Someone forgot to mention that 'no doc' and no verification of assets loans were created as an extension to the CRA by Bill Clinton in 1993.
(http://clinton6.nara.gov/1993/12/1993-12-08-briefing-by-bentsen-and-rubin.text.html)

It was this extension of the CRA that allowed banks to write 'stated asset' and 'low doc' or 'no doc' loans.

Lenders won't finder the CRA because it allowed them to write and leverage loans that they couldn't have otherwise.

Now, fast forward to today...

Who is more sophisticated? The loan company or the person borrowing? Who has more tools to do the evaluation? They can tell if you had cornflakes or eggs, but they can't provide good support for Joe average who typically gets a large housing loan every 10 years? Yes, if you borrow, you are responsible. If you make the loan you are responsible.

Good grief. And what exactly is that small "sub prime lender" not covered by the CRA going to do when it watches potential customers going to the big banks? To compete they also lowered their lending standards.

Glen is just wrong. He does not mention anything about the issue of the hush-hush CRA "score". If a bank wanted to get the green light from certain regulators regarding expansion plans, bank acquisitions, business expansion, etc. they needed a favorable CRA score. If you were that close to the situation you surely are aware of this.

Pretty obvious that the author of the article is drinking the Obama Kool Aid.

I am Conservative but I am doing my very, very best to take this all in and to look at this "crisis" objectively. Not sure it is the ONLY reason for the "crisis" but CLEARLY the lending to unqualified borrowers is a primary factor. CLEARLY the lending to unqualified borrowers was spurred on by political policies dating back to the 90's. Again, not sure this is the only reason for the "crisis" but one thing I am sure of... Nancy Pelosi is an absolute joke. Trying to blame Bush's economic policies???? PLEASE!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Now I say "crisis" b/c I am still trying to figure out what this all means. My neighbors and I (all hard working professionals) continue to pay our mortgages on time. We all took out loans for our houses that we knew we could afford. So, if banks and/or borrowers weren't that responsible, WHY IN THE WORLD should we the taxpayers be paying for that? Boggles the freaking mind.

But, then again, what do I know. I am just a bitter white guy clinging to my guns and religion and I have always been proud of my country.

As Reagan said, "there you go again." Only the totally ignorant could not connect CRA to the financial crisis we are in. Years of having ACORN intimidate banks and their officers and the Clinton administration's Janet Reno threatening if loans wre not blindly given to low income caused the crash of FannieMae and FreddieMac. The Democrats like Barney Frank who fought in 2004 and 2005(see CSPAN) to resist Republican led reforms kept it buried until it imploded. It didn't start in 2005 or 2006 it was hidden in tons of debt. Now America hurts and people are losing homes they couldn't have never afforded. Why didn't CRA help them get homes they could afford with loans that didn't inflate--money into the pocket of those like Dodd and Obama and Frank is a good guess!

Simply stated, the Community Reinvestment Act it is a program that requires banks to make loans to people with bad credit. Banks making loans to people with bad credit is what precipitated the current disaster. Anyone who questions what caused his financial crisis need only view the situation in simple terms:
1. Banks HATE making loans to people with bad credit, this has always been the case throughout American history. Anyone who has ever worked for a bank knows this.
2. Why would a bank make a bad loan to someone with bad credit unless they were compelled by law to do so, and unless there was an institution, Fannie Mae/Freddie Mac that would buy the bad loans from them?
Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae are government sponsored giants whose investments are 100% insured by taxpayer dollars whether or not they make good or bad financial descisions. They bought the vast majority of these crappy loans from banks, repackaged them, and hid them along with other securities in various mutual funds and other investments.

In summary, the Federal Government mandated that banks make loans to people with questionable credit through a Federal Law called the Community Reinvestment Act. The Federal Government then bought all of the bad loans that these banks made and hid them in other investments and sold them on Wall Street.
To blame Wall Street for this crisis is absurd; investors on Wall Street were tricked into buying securities that they thought were backed by the Federal Government, i.e. Fannie/Freddie, but Fannie/Freddie ran out of money and the securities turned out to be worthless.
This crisis is a massive fraud perpetrated not by Wall Street but by the US Federal Government. Wall Street and anyone with investments in the stock market were the victims.

Deregulation? What deregulation? The CRA is but one example of government meddling in the mortgage industry that led to the housing bubble and subsequent crisis. Government meddling distorts markets and the mortgage crisis is yet another example of the negative unintended consequences of well-intended government...meddling. The old saying is "the road to hell is paved with good intentions".

Let's Keep This Simple
October 3, 2008 12:01 PM
I would like to offer the current proposition:
Banks giving loans to people with bad credit (subprime loans), was the cause of the current crisis; I don't think anyone who has participated in this discussion would disagree with that. The CRA mandates that banks to give loans to people with questionable credit; I don't think anyone would disagree with that either.
If subprime loans are the cause of the crisis, whether it was the sole cause of the crisis or not, why would we continue the CRA program when we know that it compels banks to do exactly what we all know caused this crisis? It would be absolute insanity to allow this program to continue.

This is a joke article, the facts you have are so biased it's ridiculous. The inflation of homes started in 1995!!! Look at any chart that trends both inflation of currency and home prices and you will see very clearly that CLINTON started that, he dramaticly revised the CRA in 1995 and with the extreme over inflation of equity in homes because everyone and there mom could get a house. So don't say something as ignorent as "a 30 year old Act" when it was completely revised in 1995 by Bill Clinton. This stuff doens't happen overnight, as gas prices put pressure on middle class and lower income families with subprime mortgages (and if you were a bank you could be SUED, Obama was on a case like this.. for discrimination)and by the time the pressure got bad, banks started losing money, it's taken until NOW for it to catch up to us. Any chart on the Dow, inflation of home prices will show you in started in 1995 after Bill Clinton dramaticly revised this act.

It's obvious to me that this problem originated with low/no qualification standards for mortgage loans (sub-prime and Alt-A) that was being supported and fed by a hyper-inflation of real estate value and too easy securitization. It was viscious cycle that Fannie and Freddie catylized and fed oxygen to. And why was this. Strong DC lobbying...by groups pushing CRA and home ownership for low/no income constiuents.

Whether a firm was subject to CRA had nothing to do with it. Clinton's changes to CRA were the seed to grow the weed. Pressure from outside groups such as ACORN (just as one example) who didn't take into consideration whether a bank was actually required under CRA to provide loans forced the banks (through misguided affirmative action) to make these loans to minimize detrimental outcomes. Other firms not subject to the same requirements saw an income opportunity as did corrupt real estate brokers, real estate agents, etc. Greed was a natural outcome of the changes Clinton made. It was also only natural for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac as GSE's to cover up the failed Democratic government decision.

Of course, it was touted as a Democratic success (and still is) but lending to those who never could afford it in the first place (including those at the top all the way down to the greedy house flippers that took on mortgages that they really couldn't afford under the assumption that there was an investment prospect and those who should outright never been granted a mortgage because of their income) is the type of unsound thinking that has created this National failure.

The NY Times reported on this 9 years ago and it was clear then that this was going to become a problem yet it was just accepted because so many had so much to gain:

The reason why the whole banking system is crumbling is that FM/FM bought these loans (giving the banks and mortgage companies the means to make more questionable loans) and bundled these mortgages into bonds . No one knows what loans are in what bonds, so there is no way to value them. Because it is likely that many of these bonds will turn out to be poor investments, and insurance on the bonds value is backed by insurance companies that are tapped out, the bonds now are deemed by the market to have NO value. Freddie and Fannie, by buying crappy loans and backing them with the stamp of approval of the government was turning garbage into gold. The bond rating agencies, by ignoring the scale of what was being done added their AAA ratings to suspect loans which were sold to pretty much every financial institution (the bonds were backed FM/FM so the government will make good). The companies buying them, how could they resist? These were profitable government-backed AAA bonds! Where is the risk? Freddie and Fannie paved the way. Other financial institutions mimicked what FM/FM were doing by bundling mortgages into securities and insuring them to satisfy the rating agencies that they were worth more than the shaky loans that were behind them. There is plenty of blame to go around, and CRA is part of the picture. For me, the bond rating agencies were a BIG part of the picture and shood be investigated. They made tons by evaluating and rating this "toxic paper".

This article is a major cover up. First if a bank wants to do business in a area they must have a plan for meeting the credit of that area. When government puts into play a regulation like CRA they are hidding the fact that they are forcing banks to invest in something that is very high risk. This act was not really acted on until the 1990, why do you think we had such a huge boom in housing and the economy was so good in the 90's. The balloon was being filled to the point of popping. Government put pressure on the banks during the 1990's and banks had to come up with something. With help from Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac they did. Now we are in trouble and have you ever noticed that just like with children when they are in trouble the guilty party is always the loudest at blaming others. Look out the worst is yet to come.

The amendments made to the CRA in 1995 had a great deal to do with the current credit debacle. Check out http://www.cato.org/testimony/ct-ni3-8.html written in 1995 and predicting exactly what has occurred.

Bush Called For Reform of Fannie Mae & Freddie Mac 17 Times in 2008 Alone... Dems Ignored Warnings
For many years the President and his Administration have not only warned of the systemic consequences of financial turmoil at a housing government-sponsored enterprise (GSE) but also put forward thoughtful plans to reduce the risk that either Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac would encounter such difficulties. President Bush publicly called for GSE reform 17 times in 2008 alone before Congress acted.

Unfortunately, these warnings went unheeded, as the President's repeated attempts to reform the supervision of these entities were thwarted by the legislative maneuvering of those who emphatically denied there were problems.

The White House released this list of attempts by President Bush to reform Freddie Mae and Freddie Mac since he took office in 2001. Unfortunately, Congress did not act on the president's warnings:
 2001

April: The Administration's FY02 budget declares that the size of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac is "a potential problem," because "financial trouble of a large GSE could cause strong repercussions in financial markets, affecting Federally insured entities and economic activity."

 2002

May: The President calls for the disclosure and corporate governance principles contained in his 10-point plan for corporate responsibility to apply to Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. (OMB Prompt Letter to OFHEO,

January: Freddie Mac announces it has to restate financial results for the previous three years.

February: The Office of Federal Housing Enterprise Oversight (OFHEO) releases a report explaining that "although investors perceive an implicit Federal guarantee of [GSE] obligations," "the government has provided no explicit legal backing for them." As a consequence, unexpected problems at a GSE could immediately spread into financial sectors beyond the housing market. ("Systemic Risk: Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and the Role of OFHEO," OFHEO Report, 2/4/03)

September: Fannie Mae discloses SEC investigation and acknowledges OFHEO's review found earnings manipulations.

September: Treasury Secretary John Snow testifies before the House Financial Services Committee to recommend that Congress enact "legislation to create a new Federal agency to regulate and supervise the financial activities of our housing-related government sponsored enterprises" and set prudent and appropriate minimum capital adequacy requirements.

October: Fannie Mae discloses $1.2 billion accounting error.

November: Council of the Economic Advisers (CEA) Chairman Greg Mankiw explains that any "legislation to reform GSE regulation should empower the new regulator with sufficient strength and credibility to reduce systemic risk." To reduce the potential for systemic instability, the regulator would have "broad authority to set both risk-based and minimum capital standards" and "receivership powers necessary to wind down the affairs of a troubled GSE." (N. Gregory Mankiw, Remarks At The Conference Of State Bank Supervisors State Banking Summit And Leadership, 11/6/03)

February: The President's FY05 Budget again highlights the risk posed by the explosive growth of the GSEs and their low levels of required capital, and called for creation of a new, world-class regulator: "The Administration has determined that the safety and soundness regulators of the housing GSEs lack sufficient power and stature to meet their responsibilities, and therefore…should be replaced with a new strengthened regulator." (2005 Budget Analytic Perspectives, pg. 83)

February: CEA Chairman Mankiw cautions Congress to "not take [the financial market's] strength for granted." Again, the call from the Administration was to reduce this risk by "ensuring that the housing GSEs are overseen by an effective regulator." (N. Gregory Mankiw, Op-Ed, "Keeping Fannie And Freddie's House In Order," Financial Times, 2/24/04)

June: Deputy Secretary of Treasury Samuel Bodman spotlights the risk posed by the GSEs and called for reform, saying "We do not have a world-class system of supervision of the housing government sponsored enterprises (GSEs), even though the importance of the housing financial system that the GSEs serve demands the best in supervision to ensure the long-term vitality of that system. Therefore, the Administration has called for a new, first class, regulatory supervisor for the three housing GSEs: Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and the Federal Home Loan Banking System." (Samuel Bodman, House Financial Services Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations Testimony, 6/16/04)

April: Treasury Secretary John Snow repeats his call for GSE reform, saying "Events that have transpired since I testified before this Committee in 2003 reinforce concerns over the systemic risks posed by the GSEs and further highlight the need for real GSE reform to ensure that our housing finance system remains a strong and vibrant source of funding for expanding homeownership opportunities in America… Half-measures will only exacerbate the risks to our financial system." (Secretary John W. Snow, "Testimony Before The U.S. House Financial Services Committee," 4/13/05)

July: Two Bear Stearns hedge funds invested in mortgage securities collapse.

August: President Bush emphatically calls on Congress to pass a reform package for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, saying "first things first when it comes to those two institutions. Congress needs to get them reformed, get them streamlined, get them focused, and then I will consider other options." (President George W. Bush, Press Conference, The White House, 8/9/07)

September: RealtyTrac announces foreclosure filings up 243,000 in August – up 115 percent from the year before.

September: Single-family existing home sales decreases 7.5 percent from the previous month – the lowest level in nine years. Median sale price of existing homes fell six percent from the year before.

December: President Bush again warns Congress of the need to pass legislation reforming GSEs, saying "These institutions provide liquidity in the mortgage market that benefits millions of homeowners, and it is vital they operate safely and operate soundly. So I've called on Congress to pass legislation that strengthens independent regulation of the GSEs – and ensures they focus on their important housing mission. The GSE reform bill passed by the House earlier this year is a good start. But the Senate has not acted. And the United States Senate needs to pass this legislation soon." (President George W. Bush, Discusses Housing, The White House, 12/6/07)

January: Bank of America announces it will buy Countrywide.

January: Citigroup announces mortgage portfolio lost $18.1 billion in value.

February: Assistant Secretary David Nason reiterates the urgency of reforms, says "A new regulatory structure for the housing GSEs is essential if these entities are to continue to perform their public mission successfully." (David Nason, Testimony On Reforming GSE Regulation, Senate Committee On Banking, Housing And Urban Affairs, 2/7/08)

March: Bear Stearns announces it will sell itself to JPMorgan Chase.

March: President Bush calls on Congress to take action and "move forward with reforms on Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. They need to continue to modernize the FHA, as well as allow State housing agencies to issue tax-free bonds to homeowners to refinance their mortgages." (President George W. Bush, Remarks To The Economic Club Of New York, New York, NY, 3/14/08)

April: President Bush urges Congress to pass the much needed legislation and "modernize Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. [There are] constructive things Congress can do that will encourage the housing market to correct quickly by … helping people stay in their homes." (President George W. Bush, Meeting With Cabinet, the White House, 4/14/08)

May: President Bush issues several pleas to Congress to pass legislation reforming Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac before the situation deteriorates further.

"Americans are concerned about making their mortgage payments and keeping their homes. Yet Congress has failed to pass legislation I have repeatedly requested to modernize the Federal Housing Administration that will help more families stay in their homes, reform Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to ensure they focus on their housing mission, and allow State housing agencies to issue tax-free bonds to refinance sub-prime loans." (President George W. Bush, Radio Address, 5/3/08)

"[T]he government ought to be helping creditworthy people stay in their homes. And one way we can do that – and Congress is making progress on this – is the reform of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. That reform will come with a strong, independent regulator." (President George W. Bush, Meeting With The Secretary Of The Treasury, the White House, 5/19/08)

"Congress needs to pass legislation to modernize the Federal Housing Administration, reform Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to ensure they focus on their housing mission, and allow State housing agencies to issue tax-free bonds to refinance subprime loans." (President George W.

Bush, Radio Address, 5/31/08)

June: As foreclosure rates continued to rise in the first quarter, the President once again asks Congress to take the necessary measures to address this challenge, saying "we need to pass legislation to reform Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac." (President George W. Bush, Remarks At Swearing In Ceremony For Secretary Of Housing And Urban Development, Washington, D.C., 6/6/08)

July: Congress heeds the President's call for action and passes reform of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac as it becomes clear that the institutions are failing.

In 2005-- Senator John McCain partnered with three other Senate Republicans to reform the government’s involvement in lending. Democrats blocked this reform, too.

"Most subprime loans were made by firms that aren’t subject to the CRA."

Okay. I get that. But you're using the number of firms making subprime loans as the basis of comparison. That's misleading. If the minority of firms making the subprime loans that ARE subject to the CRA includes Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, wouldn't just these two HUGE, GOVERNMENT-BACKED firms drive the market and incentivize other lending institutions to also make subprime loans?

Look, I have a high-school education. I've not spent a single day in a university classroom and even I can see this!

Oh, and another thing, Mr. Pressman. Where did you get your journalism credentials? You're supposed at least ATTEMPT to hide your bias when you submit an article. This article is positively dripping in anti-Bush vitriol. No wonder you couldn't find reliable data. You obviously weren't looking for it.

The statistics the defenders of the CRA present on this are horribly skewed. For example, Countrywide Home Loans was what these statistics would refer to as a "non-CRA lender". However, if we look at their old cached website, here's what they say about their "CRA Program":

"Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (Countrywide) is proud of its long-term commitment to affordable and fair housing...for minority and low-to moderate-income families in under-served communities..."

"..As of July 31, 2004, the company had funded nearly $301 billion toward this goal..."

And here's the best part:
"The result of these efforts is an enormous pipeline of mortgages to low- and moderate-income buyers. With this pipeline, Countrywide Securities Corporation (CSC) can potentially help you meet your Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) goals by offering both whole loan and mortgage-backed securities that are eligible for CRA credit."

So, these "non-CRA lenders" were packing their predatory loans as securities and selling them to CRA banks for CRA credit.

The idea that the CRA is not tied to these predatory sub-prime products because statistics show that the issuing banks aren't CRA lenders is horribly misleading.

You might as well claim that tobacco companies don't contribute to lung cancer because gas stations and grocery stores sell the most cigarettes.

I wish the "know-nothing" people who keep spouting non-CRA lending statistics would take a deeper look at the subjects they try to educate everyone about.

"It’s telling that, amid all the recent recriminations, even lenders have not fingered CRA. That’s because CRA didn’t bring about the reckless lending at the heart of the crisis. Just as sub-prime lending was exploding, CRA was losing force and relevance. And the worst offenders, the independent mortgage companies, were never subject to CRA — or any federal regulator. Law didn’t make them lend. The profit motive did. And that is not political correctness. It is correctness."

The worst offenders were the mortgage companies? That's a laugh, all they did was find lenders to loan the money and took a commission. It was still the lenders, banks, underwriters, that approved the applications (with their no-doc loans) and that were subject to the CRA OVER regulation (mandates to promote home ownership in poor economic areas) that led to the collapse. ALmost all the sources in this article were Clintonite appointees that had an agenda. For a balanced opinion on the CRA's impact go to

CRA loans most likely played a part in this subprime even it may have been indirectly. Rules like CRA open up mechanisms that allows banks to bypass the normal methods of credit checking. This is the main contribution of CRA. It created a mechanism for subprime loans to pass through the system and to grow way beyond the intention. Its not easy to meddle...

"The CRA does not require subprime loans. It requires that a bank make loans in the same geographic areas where it takes deposits (i.e., it prevents "redlining"). And financial institutions that don't take deposits"

And this is the genesis of why the CRA was an ill-advised piece of legislation in the first place, which was only made worse over time with additional bad regulations not de-regulation. Extending credit to any one individual should not be made on the basis of the geographic location of the individual- it should be made strictly based on that individual's ability to pay and credit worthiness, end of story. The CRA was the beginning of this sad saga, and to insist otherwise is most disingenuous.

Is Aaron Pressman ignorant of the fact the CRA has been updated and expanded multiple times since the original 1997 version?

Does Aaron Pressman not know that money is fungible? CRA specified changes in loans had to apply to all, FNMA backed or not. It does not matter what percentage of subprime loans were bought by FNMA, it was an open market.

Does Aaron Pressman not understand the basics of monetary inflation and supply/demand curves? Flood a market with money or credit, and prices go up.

Regulation, not deregulation is what caused the current crisis. I agree that Democrats very rarely run on deregulation--they want to regulate everything, so we can lay the subprime crisis directly at the Democrats' door just as 9/11 can be. The Bush intellignece agencies were operating in rules put in place by Clinton that prohibited information sharing. Finally -- it is not the Feds' job to provide hurricane services--it is and always has been, the job of local agencies. In the case of Katrina we had a Democrat governor, and particularly a Democrat mayor of New Orleans who didn't follow his own disaster plan and was desperate for a scapegoat. The same storm hit Mississippi and Alabama and we didn't have near the problems there that Big Easy had, even though they were on the dangerous East side of the eye ot the hurricane. Could it be that was because those states had Republicans in charge? I know it's a kneejerk reaction for you libs to blame Republicans for everything from hurricanes to diaper rash, but it makes you look uninformed.

Also--it is disingenuous to say that most loans were made by institutions not subject to CRA. They are referring to mortgage brokers, but very few of those firms have their own pool of cash to lend from, they simply shop the app among financial institutions who ARE covered by CRA to place the loan for their client. Ultimately in virtually all mortgage loans, a CRA-subject institution must scrutinize the app before the money is lent.

Before you post an article you should do a little math. While I do not have the precise data, you should get it and do the analysis. 1/4 all banks were regulated by CRA. Of those 1/4 of Loans were CRA. Of those 20% are forclosing. Normal forclosure is 1%. So the rough math calculation is .25*.25*.19=1.2% of forcloseres added by CRA. Our current forclosure rate causing the problem is up from about 1% to about 2.5%. It is not the entire problem but it is a huge problem. As long as home prices went up and CRA maid subprime loan, one subprime could sell to another and excape forclosure.

Why is it that liberals, when confronted with the truth and backed by quantifiable and verifiable data, feel that it is only necessary to say, "That's a lie!" in order to prove their case?

I find it stunning that people think more regulation is the answer to this crisis. For the next ten years or so, maybe even longer, we will all be paying for a disaster created by Fannie Mae/Freddie Mac, a monstrosity of a Government institution, 100% backed by taxpayer dollars. Our Government has maintained massive control over the housing market for years; WHY GIVE THEM MORE? Shouldn't the fact that Fannie and Freddie and CRA welfare programs played a major role in bringing about this crisis be a sign that the GOVERNMENT NEEDS TO GET OUT OF THE HOUSING MARKET? How about let's take away their power to do this again.
More regulation means more bureaucrats, who know absolutely nothing about banking, finance, real estate, etc., yet they make decisions that have a huge impact on those markets every day.
We have tried having a housing market that is massively controlled and regulated by incompetent bureaucrats in Washington; let's try giving the free market, (you know, that thing that made America the greatest most successful, most productive country in the world), a chance.

If the CRA simply directs banks to make loans in a "Safe and Sound" manner, why do we need BS programs like the CRA in the first place? I am pretty sure banks were making "Safe and Sound" loans way before the passing of the CRA welfare program; and I am also pretty sure that back then people actually bought houses they could afford instead of the now typical $300,000 home on a $30,000 salary.

Don't overlook the role of other Government Agencies in this crisis such as the 100% taxpayer backed Fannie and Freddie. The 3% ARMs that increase to 12% and "no principal loans" were only made possible with the guarantee that these agencies would buy them at a premium. Fannie and Freddie eliminated the inherent risk of subprime loans; that is how we got here.

Jerry
October 15, 2008 5:33 PM
I am amazed by the attitude of some people on this forum that put so much trust in Government officials. People like Barney Frank, who knows about as much about real estate as I know about brain surgery, stood up there in Congress for years fighting to expand Fannie/Freddie and make even more of these ridiculous loans while several experts, (people who actually knew something about the real estate market), warned against it.

The following statement was written in a September 1999 article titled "Fannie Mae Eases Credit To Aid Mortgage Lending" in the New York Times:

"In moving, even tentatively, into this new area of lending, Fannie Mae is taking on significantly more risk, which may not pose any difficulties during flush economic times. But the government-subsidized corporation may run into trouble in an economic downturn, prompting a government rescue similar to that of the savings and loan industry in the 1980's."

When my parents and grandparents bought their first homes, meager as they were, the monthly notes were within a range they could afford. They never got evicted because, even when the economy wasn't doing so well and/or one of them lost a job, they could adjust their lifestyles and get by. Banks made reasonable loans because they knew if the loans defaulted, it would hurt them financially. US banks have a long tradition of stability; it is why every country in the world up until recently placed more trust in US banks than banks in their own countries.

With the carrot of Fannie/Freddie and the stick of the CRA our Government completely skewed the risk/benefit equation for private banks, and sparked an irresponsible lending free-for-all. These programs had the net result of persuading poor people to buy homes that they could not afford, followed by the excruciating process of trying to pay a monthly mortgage that they could not afford, followed by the embarassment of having all of their posessions placed on the curb by the local Sherriff's Dept. They encouraged "predatory lending" on a mass scale, eliminating risk and incentivizing loans that were at one time considered to be highly risky. The end result was the destruction of a sector of the American economy that, prior to the current mess, had a very long tradition of being the most stable in the world.

While we are firing all of these bankers and CEOs, let's start at the top. Let's fire the Barney Franks and all of the other Government officials who forged ahead with the expansion of these disastrous policies in the face of repeated warnings and created the catalyst for the current global economic crisis.

The CRA was only one factor in the meltdown; not all banks were subject to it but it certainly played a role. Where the CRA did not apply, the 100% taxpayer based government entities known as Fannie Mae, Ginnie Mae, and Freddie Mac strongly encouraged banks to make loans to people with questionable credit.

Banks like Countrywide, the poster child in the mortgage meltdown, were given high praise by Fannie/Freddie for "the most flexible underwriting criteria permitted", (located on page 11 in the report below created by the Fannie Mae Foundation). Countrywide's $1 billion commitment to low-income loans in 1992 had grown to $80 billion by 1999 and $600 billion by early 2003.

85%, let me repeat, 85% of Countrywide's loans were sold to either Ginnie Mae or Fannie Mae.

"A majority of Countrywide’s mortgage loans are sold to Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, or Ginnie Mae. About 36 percent of the loans go to Ginnie Mae, 48 percent to Fannie Mae" (from the same report, page 3).

http://www.fanniemaefoundation.org/programs/pdf/rep_newmortmkts_countrywide.pdf

The following is a quote from Ben Bernake in a speech given on March 30, 2007 titled "The Community Reinvestment Act: Its Evolution and New Challenges".

"Securitization of affordable housing loans expanded, as did the secondary market for these loans, in part reflecting a 1992 law that required the government-sponsored enterprises, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, to devote a large percentage of their activities to meeting affordable housing goals." (p. 3)

Below is the link to the full speech on the Federal Reserve website:

http://www.federalreserve.gov/newsevents/speech/Bernanke20070330a.htm

The 1992 law that he refers to is called the The Federal Housing Enterprises Financial Safety and Soundness Act of 1992. If you care to read it the full text can be found here.
http://thomas.loc.gov/cgi-bin/query/F?c102:6:./temp/~c102RepSWf:e867:

There is clear evidence to show that the US Government, through entities like Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac dramatically expanded the purchase of questionable loans during the 1990s, relaxed the credit requirements of borrowers through laws like the "The Federal Housing Enterprises Financial Safety and Soundness Act of 1992", and then repackaged these loans and resold them on Wall Street, poisoning the US financial system and markets all over the world.

Anyone who makes a statement such as "Where the CRA did not apply, the 100% taxpayer based government entities known as Fannie Mae, Ginnie Mae, and Freddie Mac...." already renders much of his succeeding argument questionable. At the time we're talking about, Freddie and Fannie were PRIVATE!

"From 1938 to 1968, the secondary mortgage market in the United States was monopolized by the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae), which was a government agency during that period. In 1984, to help balance the federal budget, part of Fannie Mae was converted to a PRIVATE CORPORATION. To provide competition in the secondary mortgage market, and to end Fannie Mae's monopoly, Congress chartered Freddie Mac as a PRIVATE CORPORATION.

The Emergency Home Finance Act of 1970 created Freddie Mac. The goal was to create a secondary market for conventional mortgages, as indicated in the Fannie Mae charter. [3]

The Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act ("FIRREA") of 1991 revised and standardized the regulatory mechanisms for both Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. Prior to that, Freddie Mac was owned by the Federal Home Loan Bank System and its member thrifts and governed by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board which was later reorganized into the Office of Thrift Supervision. FIRREA severed Freddie Mac's ties to the Federal Home Loan Bank System, created an 18-member board of directors to run Freddie Mac, and subjected it to HUD oversight."

To Reality and other banking insiders:

Interestingly I have a son that was for years involved in banking and securities and I have another son who had to have his home foreclosed on recently. So I kind of see from both sides of that issue.

Yes, your husband and his colleagues probably did make lots of money on those home-equity, ARM, and other dicey mortgage deals. And he probably never heard of CRA until now.

My question is this: How could a lending institution even think about developing these risky mortgage products unless there was someway to guarantee the loans and make sure that the reward would be greater than the risk factor?

Greedy lenders were relying on the hope that the housing market would continue to rise, even when economists were warning that it couldn't continue forever. Why? Were they completely unaware of market trends? Or did they have a backdoor of security knowing that thier products would be backed by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac?

So, what was it that spurred this increase in housing prices that seemed to spiral out of control and way beyond the normal inflation rate? What caused this frenzy that made people believe that the housing market would continue to spiral upwards forever?

I think that is what this debate is all about! But I personally do believe that the loosening of lending requirements that came as a result of the changes to CRA in 1995 helped to push the market in that direction.

Countrywide had a BIG hand in this crisis and there is no denying that. They not only gave out financing to cover CRA loans which may or may not have defaulted, but they also offered every concievable kind of risky mortgage loan out there. And they were praised for doing so by Fannie Mae.

The fact that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac and Ginnie Mae were backing low-income mortgages as well as buying repackaged securities that also included even higher risk mortgages, many of those being flipper schemes bought into by middle to higher income familes, is partly what caused the collapse we are seeing now.

My son walked away from his home because it became so upside-down after the value fell substantially that he couldn't sell it. He's not poor, but he sure isn't wealthy either. He was given an ARM loan that we, his parents, warned him would go bad, but he failed to take our advice. This crisis is partly his fault for going beyond his means to buy a house that was overinflated instead of waiting until he could really afford one. However, if the ARM loan were never offered to him, he could never have gotten into this situation.

This is happening to middle-class Americans all the way down to the poor who can no longer pay their mortgage due to all kinds of factors, including higher unemployment.

Does all of this come from the CRA? Of course not! Realistically, I think the CRA as it was originally written was a good law. But did the expansion of CRA open a door to help fuel the housing market boom and drive the market toward riskier mortgages? Yes, I think it had a hand in it.

I agree with those here who say that some of the biggest culprits in all this mess are the Government agencies that meddle in the housing market.

Bottom line though, it is the invidual who over-extends himself on credit that he cannot afford that is ultimately to blame. We have been living on easy credit for far too long in this country. Our children have been taught that it's ok to buy now and pay later. Lax and irresponsible lending has fueled this philosophy and it is coming back to haunt us. Instead we should teach our children to work hard, save for the future, and buy only what they need and can afford on their current income, or do without.

I firmly believe in the American dream of home ownership, but that dream must be based on sound economic pricnciples, the first of which should ALWAYS be LIVE WITHIN YOUR MEANS.

To discover the genesis to this fiscal debacle - we have to go back to 1968 when Lyndon Johnson privatized Fannie Mae. This action created the platform on which the Democrats made significant progress towards taking your hard earned money and giving to others with the result of raping and pillaging the hard working men and women of this great nation. In 1977 Jim Carter put the Community Reinvestment Act in place which served to infuse capital in to segments of the market - this served a worthy purpose. The legislation that was put in place that was evil and sinister was Clinton's revision of the CRA that totally liberalized the Act so as to allow for the securitization of subprime mortgages, (and this is the kicker), with the implication that Fannie Mae would provide the guarantee. The mortgages created under Franklin Raines tenure between 1999 and 2002 created the toxic poison that remain on the books to this day and ultimately caused this gross and incompetent assignment of real estate assets. This infusion of vast quantities of money over a short period of time also caused housing prices to spike which undermined one of the stated goals of Fannie Mae in the first place. The pathetic part is that Schummer Dodd and Frank don't know didley squat about how to run a business never mind create affordable housing responsibly. Democrats all - just plain dumb.

OK, even if the Clinton administration had a big hand in creating the conditions that allowed this to happen, (I am not convinced), I have three problems: 1) Does anyone honestly think that this could happen again in our lifetime, given what we know now? 2) Who can blame Obama for this, or even use it against him? He is just as likely to press for regulation as McCain. 3) Just because CRA forced banks and brokers to lend, doesn't mean they were forced to create teaser rates and ARMs. If everyone had been able to get a fixed rate mortgage at a decent interest rate, we would not have a problem. The majority of the people would still be able to pay their mrotgage. It just doesn't make sense to charge the people you think might default a higher (or increasing) rate. Greed and the necessity to increase growth or get punished by Wall Street is just as much at fault as anything else I have heard.

Jerry
October 29, 2008 11:58 AM
To answer Josh, yes this could very well happen again in our lifetime. There is a widely held belief among ultra-liberals as we have heard in recent news, in the idea of "spreading the wealth". They believe that through programs like the CRA and by mandating that "Government Sponsored Enterprises" like Fannie and Freddie lower their credit standards, suddenly people with bad spending habits are going to make a 180 degree change in their lives and become fiscally responsible. Living in a nice house is not going to change years of poor money management skills. As long as extreme left-wing individuals believe the ridiculous and frequently disproven notion that government handouts will somehow magically change a lifetime of bad spending habits, this could very well happen again.
2. Yes, Obama certainly has some culpability in this crisis. In Buycks-Roberson v. Citibank in 1995, Obama representing ACORN, sued Citibank under the CRA in a housing discrimination suit. Now regardless of whether you think the CRA was a direct cause of this crisis or not, we do know that it was caused primarily by subprime loans being handed out to a large number of people and failing. ACORN is known to harass and embarrass banks for refusing to give loans to people with bad credit. By working on ACORN’s behalf, Obama acted as a contributor to an organization that promoted making subprime loans to people.
3. Anyone with a basic understanding of finance knows that the reason some people with poor credit are charged higher interest rates than others is because they are more likely to default. With several decades of statistical loan data, banks know that a certain percentage of subprime loans will go bad. The higher interest rate makes up for the percentage of loans that default. You say “It just doesn't make sense to charge the people you think might default a higher (or increasing) rate.” A tremendous amount of statistical data collected over several decades would prove otherwise.
Greed did not cause this crisis. As this situation was developing, Wall Street was doing the same thing it has been doing throughout the history of the stock market; buying and selling securities for a profit. It was the Federal Government, strongly encouraging and in some cases forcing banks to make loans to people with questionable credit, that led to a massive failure in the housing market.
People say we need more regulation. What would the Government “regulate”. Would it tell banks to stop making loans to people with questionable credit? (The CRA and Fannie/Freddie encouraged banks to make loans to people with questionable credit). Would it force banks to raise their credit standards, (the CRA and Fannie/Freddie encouraged banks to lower them). Would it tell banks to stop selling bad loans to Fannie/Freddie, while at the same time lowering Fannie/ Freddie’s standards for the types of loans that they are allowed to buy on the secondary market?

Banks generally didn’t make such loans historically, (or at best it was extremely difficult), until compelled to do so by the Federal Government. It wasn’t until the Federal Government became heavily involved in the housing market that we started having problems; prior to that our real estate market was among the most stable in the world for several decades. Perhaps the Federal Government should stop creating disasters that it has to immediately turn around and fix. The majority of people who received subprime loans under these programs are actually worse off now than if this massive government intervention had never taken place.

Lem'me get this straight:

The Dems are upset becasue it's been traced to a piece of legiclation by a Dem, loosened by a Dem that says you must lend to underincome areas. Says nothing about qualifying for the loans, but that a percentage of loans must be in underincome areas. If there is little income, how do you pay them back?

The Repubs are mad becasue it happened while they are in the Executive, and that Congress gets a "pass" for the oversight they are crying out for.

The core of the problem is basic lending practices, like "no phone, no loan". Why would I give money to you if I have no way of tracking you down? Why would I give you money, if you don't have the ability to pay?

These institutions (banks, brokers, thrifts, etc) made record profits using these exotic programs, which FNMA and FHLMC got into. RECORD PROFITS! Now that the "chickens are coming home to roost" we have to bail them out. They took the highs, now let them take the lows.

Where were the Boards of Directors in charge of the hierarchy of these institutions? Their responsibility is to hire effective leadership. If the leadership is failing and losing focus, then get new!

More oversight? Isn't that what the CRA and its mandate of loans to lower income areas did? How about sound banking and lending practices?

Last statement: If the Dems were not at the root of this problem, why are there no hearings or prosecutions from the House and Senate? They'll bring charges on anyone, and yet nothing. They've said that they will bring charges against President Bush after the election, but no word about this crisis? C'Mon!

I don't think George Orwell could have written a fictional example of propaganda that is more of a brazen lie than this one.

The "the false and politicized attack on Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac?" What, cooking books, going insolvent and costing the American taxpayers hundreds of billions of dollars is a GOOD thing?

How about the "independent mortgage companies," that were were "never subject to CRA?" Well, they were writing subprime mortgages, alright, because they knew they could turn around and sell them to, you guessed it, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.

So the "unfairly attacked" Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac were giving lenders a perverted incentive to make bad loans, CRA was leaning on lenders to make bad loans, and when the loans went bad, the government didn't cause the crisis, the free market did.

Sure. War is Peace. Freedom is Slavery.

I agree with this Harvard senior economics lecturer Jeffrey Miron:

"The current mess would never have occurred in the absence of ill-conceived federal policies. The federal government chartered Fannie Mae in 1938 and Freddie Mac in 1970; these two mortgage lending institutions are at the center of the crisis. The government implicitly promised these institutions that it would make good on their debts, so Fannie and Freddie took on huge amounts of excessive risk.

Worse, beginning in 1977 and even more in the 1990s and the early part of this century, Congress pushed mortgage lenders and Fannie/Freddie to expand subprime lending. The industry was happy to oblige, given the implicit promise of federal backing, and subprime lending soared.

This subprime lending was more than a minor relaxation of existing credit guidelines. This lending was a wholesale abandonment of reasonable lending practices in which borrowers with poor credit characteristics got mortgages they were ill-equipped to handle."

How about a simple question- If the CRA had NOTHING to do with banks making these bad loans, why did none of the banks make these loans before the CRA passed?

How do you explain that?? It has to do with the assurances that the Federal Government gave to Fannie and Freddie.

Ed

Horse hockey!!!!

Mortgage brokers are governed by a host of federal laws and regulations. For example, mortgage brokers must comply with: the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA), the Truth in Lending Act (TILA), the Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act (HOEPA), the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA), the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA), the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA), and the Federal Trade Commission Act (FTC Act), as well as fair lending and fair housing laws. Many of these statutes, coupled with their implementing regulations, provide substantive protection to borrowers who seek mortgage financing. These laws impose disclosure requirements on brokers, define high-cost loans, and contain anti-discrimination provisions.
Additionally, mortgage brokers are under the oversight of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and the Federal Trade Commission (FTC); and to the extent their promulgated laws apply to mortgage brokers, the Federal Reserve Board, the Internal Revenue Service, and the Department of Labor.

That's one reason why those non-risk-taking-meanie-banker-buddies-of-Bawney took such a hit.

One should know a fact here: if BANKS wanted FDIC insurance and discount rates, among other things, they HAD TO COMPLY WITH CRA. Otherwise, start a credit union in Smallsville, USA. Kapiche?

See? Simple: want FDIC insurance, bank discount rates? Bawney's got an offer you can't refuse.

Martin Eakes and coupled with its partner organization the Self Help credit union headed The Center for Responsible Lending, is a bit of a misnomer. This center promotes mortgage loans to be made by people whom turns out, irresponsible to lend to. They’ve made their propaganda machine on the cash advance industry, recently restricted in Ohio by the Small Loan Act, and when cash advance lenders there found legal means to stay in business, they started screaming about it in a most child-like fashion. It’s really hard to believe they really are a Center for Responsible Lending.

It doesn't matter what type of lending institution issues the sub-prime mortgage. The problems came in when a large group, or "pool" or mortgages were packaged together as an investment security. These were sold by the initial institution that issued them, and bought by other banks, companies, and individuals who used them as investment instruments. When the sub-prime mortgages that were within those securities defaulted, whoever was holding the security at the time (usually a different bank) was the one that suffered most.

This is why AIG is taking the hardest hit in the banking industry right now. They "invested" in, or, bought, securities such as these, from other banks such as Goldman.

Another thing, as many of you have mentioned, it was Clinton who made this issue worse, by repealing the Glass Steagall Act of 1933 (Banking Act of 1933). This Act had initially separated commercial from investment banking to eliminate conflicts of interest and to reduce speculative trading in certain markets, including real estate, which, hmm, I'm pretty sure would be considered housing.

If this Act had not been repealed (because investing in housing would not have been possible), many of the problems we are facing now would not even exist.

Sub Prime loans were relatively non existant before Clinton. During Clinton's administration they were the highest as a percentage of all mortgages and the reason that they did not collapse was that because fo the .com and technology boom, as well as the 15 year run in the real estate market there was no stress put on the system really. As soon as there was they began falling from the sky. Clinton had good intentions just as with any other entitlement program, but just as the other entitlement programs they are breaking this country.

Here is A great video of Clinton's administration bragging about forceing Banks to make sub prime loans.

I didn't see anyone mention why the CRA became law and was then amended. Democrats aren't nicer than Republicans in terms of wanting everyone to own a pretty house; they will sink this country in order to get more minority votes (see Obama's wealth distribution theory).

Look at Chrysler and GM and how labor unions have benefitted as lower tier creditors. Give whatever interest group their free cheese to thank them for their vote in 11/08 and for future votes. Sadly, this is what America has become.

Using frequencies in the Ghz range is pretty dumb for an earthbound broadcast system that needs to penetrate hills and buildings. You'd think they'd have figured that out before they started the tests.

As for recievers - my Denon picks up L Band but its the only one I know of.

Hit or miss. I've gotten satellite reception indoors without an external antenna, internal antenna only, and without ear a window. But it was a frame house.

When I checked the antenna orientation function on the radio, it showed that, indeed I was receiving satellite signal, and not the terrestrial repeater.

Near a window, no problem. With an external antenna, exceptional reception.

So, yes, it does work, indoors. But it's not always easy.

XM is a hybrid satellite/terrestrial system. They cover a good deal of Los Angeles with a 10 KW transmitter on Mt. Harvard. It gets indoors surprisingly well.

They thought at one time that it would be good to replace analog low-power community radio and perhaps local radio. National and some regional radio could use Band III.

L-Band DAB would use kiloWatt power as well as 1,7 MHz channels.
Standard 2,4 GHz Wi-Fi would use rather wider channels.

Liberty Net: October 23, 2010

http://3950.net/2010/10/liberty-net-october-23-2010/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

SINCE W1WCR could not be on the air at opening time ï¿½ 10PM Saturday ï¿½ as usual, N2IRJ became acting Net Control Station for the Liberty Net this week. The conversation was intense and the ideas expressed were sometimes at a level rarely rivaled even in the most free-thinking academies of the Western world. There were some solemn moments as the life and friendship of a late supporter of the net, Bob Glisch, were remembered.

Here are a just a few of the topics covered this time on amateur radioï¿½s most exciting net:

ï¿½ The mortgage crisis is really two crises in one ï¿½ mortgage defaults and tax defaults. As more and more people are forced out of their homes, the remaining homeowners face increased demands for property taxes ï¿½ and, when some canï¿½t pay, the positive feedback cycle intensifies. (1 hour 38 minutes)

ï¿½ Homeowners seldom riot and burn, but as more Americans become mere tenants, a larger number will feel they have nothing left to lose ï¿½ and their anger is growing. (1 hour 42 minutes)

ï¿½ Are the banks ï¿½ who are setting up shadow corporations to buy tax liens ï¿½ conspiring with the regime in Washington to turn us into propertyless sharecroppers on the land our forefathers pioneered? (1 hour 44 minutes)

ï¿½ The Liberty Net lost a loyal friend when shortwave listener Bob Glisch of Wisconsin finally succumbed to cancer this week. Not only was he a warm friend, supportive of net activities for many years, but he was part of an ultimately successful local effort to oust a corrupt governor. Bob was studying for his ham ticket when he died. Even though he never had his own station, he spoke by telephone so often with net luminaries N2IRJ (through whose phone patch he spoke on the air), N2SAG, and W1WCR that he was a very familiar voice. Back in May he helped the net track down an intentional jammer. He will be missed. (1 hour 54 minutes)

ï¿½ It seems that death so often comes just as a man or woman has begun to achieve a critical mass of maturity and knowledge. Then the life-cycle begins all over again with the young and inexperienced. The work of the Life Extension Foundation could greatly benefit the nation, as well as the individual, by fostering a vast increase of our peopleï¿½s stock of wisdom. (1 hour 59 minutes)

ï¿½ Are the powers that be determined to pay off the national debt at pennies on the dollar through inflation? If so, all holders of US bonds and recipients of Social Security will receive nothing but a pittance. (3 hours 20 minutes)

ï¿½ Did George Bush allow us to be attacked on 9/11/2001 through incompetence ï¿½ or complicity? Those are the only alternatives. (3 hours 22 minutes)

The Liberty Net ï¿½ amateur radioï¿½s longest-running discussion net ï¿½ is on the air every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time on or around 3950 kHz (usually within 10 kHz) SSB.

Remember, thanks to N2SAG and N2IRJ and W1WCR, you can listen live ï¿½ and chat live ï¿½ via the Web whenever the Liberty Net is on the air. And, as always, you can download the net right here at http://3950.net and listen at your leisure.

Apparently they have someone to back them if they are going to build need.

AOR seems to have a few problems with its $10K AR Alpha when the Georgetown, Guyana. You may think you've never heard of this place but you have.

The former British Guiana (one of the three Guianas - the other two being former Dutch Guiana, now Surinam, and French Guiana, all on the northeast shoulder of South America) - is these days visited by folks into eco-tourism. This place has one of the most untouched rainforests on earth with an astonishing variety of bird and wildlife.

But Guyana doesn't ring a bell with you because of harpy eagles and howler monkeys. How about Jim Jones and Jonestown? Yes, that Guyana, where, on November 18, 1978, over 900 Americans committed mass suicide on orders of their cult leader.

It remains one of the most bizarre events of modern times - from which the phrase "drinking the Kool-Aid" originates, meaning blind unthinking acceptance of a suicidally idiotic set of beliefs.

Yet almost no one knows just what, exactly, were the beliefs of the "Peoples Temple" cult created by Jim Jones. Some sort of weird religion, right?

Nope. Jim Jones calling his Peoples Temple a "church" was a tax-avoidance scam as it was purely secular. He admitted in a taped interview, "I'm an atheist." He was not a religious leader. He was a Stalin-admiring far left San Francisco Democrat [- in another word a JACKASS].

That group is very well known. They are generally called as "infidels" ... Unfortunately, there were many millions of people murdered in the name G-d due to various/different religious wars.
Reformation,crusades,countless jihads and similar "liberations" destryed entire cultures throughout history. And they always and invearibly considered themselves as the "true believers",sadly enough...

The Big Brown 0baMa0 Union Bailout
UPS and the Teamsters want 0baMa0 to hobble Federal Express

...the language [was] inserted in the House version of the FAA Reauthorization bill, which James Oberstar (D-MN), chairman of the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, said will be on the president's desk by July 4. The language, which is not included in the Senate version of the bill, would reclassify thousands of FedEx workers under the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB). Currently, all FedEx Express employees are classified under the Railway Labor Act (RLA), which governs airlines.

The difference between the two comes down to the ability to unionize employees. Under the RLA, unionization must be done on a national basis. NLRB allows unions to form on a building-by-building basis, something UPS and the Teamsters would be more than happy to see happen.

The FTC decision is a classic DC whitewash, but it a pattern for this administration which has repeatedly given Google “get out of jail free” cards, no-bid contracts and undisclosed lobbying and business access to top administration officials. And when Big Government exposed the administration coordinating privately with Google, what happened?

Nothing.

That isn’t true everywhere.

•The Canadian Privacy Commissioner recently found that Google did indeed capture personal sensitive information as part of its Wi-Spying
•The British Government just re-opened their investigation into Google Wi-Spy over the weekend
•Over 35 States Attorneys General continue to investigate privacy violations related to WiSpy

But in the United States, where a top Google executive hosted a $1.8 million fundraiser in her home for President Obama last week?

Nothing.

- XM has decent coverage on S Band.

Dave,

Canada gave-up on Eureka-147 DAB and opted for the American XM/Sirius Satellite Radio System with some Canadian 'Content' = what-works-works-! ~ RHF

Plus Canada has a agenda for a more active and aggressive 'transition' from the old AM/MW Radio Band to the larger; almost exclusive use of the FM
Radio Band as a Local City/Metro {Community}
Urban Radio Service with the fewer AM/MW Radio Stations being utilized as Regional/Provincial Radio Broadcasters serving larger Rural Areas having fewer people per 10,000 km2, ~3,861 Sq.Miles http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Rural_Canada

Majority of the Population ~85% in "Clusters" in Localized City/Metro Areas : That are best served by the FM Radio Band Stations.

Much Smaller ~15% of the Population Dispersed in vast Non-Localized Rural Areas : That are best served by the AM/MW Radio Band Stations; with a few Shortwave Radio Stations too.

Plus Canada has 50% of it's Population within 50km of the US Border; and 75% of it's Population within 100km of the US Border.
http://www.unitednorthamerica.org/canadapop.htm Meaning American FM Radio Stations in equal numbers to the number of Canadian FM Radio Stations provide indirect Radio Service to this large segment of the Canadian Population.
http://www.howderfamily.com/blog/canada-close-to-the-border/
-and- YES Canadian's do Listen to American Radio.

So... IF IBOC 'Digital' FM HD-Radio in the USA ever becomes 'established' and 'accepted' in the USA : As the Standard form of FM Radio Listening and thus the Standard means of FM Radio Broadcasting : You can expect that IBOC 'Digital' FM HD-Radio will also in-time become 'established' and 'accepted' in in Canada :
Just due to the close proximity of the vast majority of the Canadian Population to the USA along the Border; and the simple fact that American Radio Signals :
DO NO STOP AT THE BORDER [.]

It Remains MHO that the Future of Terrestrial Radio Broadcasting in the USA is FM Radio; and the Future of FM Radio is IBOC 'Digital' FM HD-Radio with HD2 Channels in the USA.

NOTE : IBOC 'Digital' FM HD-Radio* with HD2 Channels in Canada makes sense too. One Radio Station on One Frequency with an HD1 Channel in English; and an HD2 Channel in French; or an HD2 Channel in the Language of one of the Local First People's of Canada.

* Single Point {Co-Located} Radio Service Serving a Diverse Bilingual & Bi-Cultural Population.

Conclusion : IBOC 'Digital' FM HD-Radio* with HD2 Channels represents both Economy and Efficiency in Canada as a National Nation-Wide Radio Service.

In that case I think they'd better forget about DRM. A smarter move would be for broadcasters to move to single sideband operations. This might not give them a larger audience, but it would sure allow them to cut a lot of their expenses. All they'd really need is a stock ham transceiver and a dipole. And I'll bet that at this moment there are more small receivers capable of receiving SSB than DRM.

There is a gap in the market for a high performance stand alone hf receiver. Problem is the technology is moving too fast for the production world. It's a good thing that someone is taking on the challenge but with the drop in the dollar I would expect at least a $3K price tag.

Even better would be double-sideband-reduce-carrier. It's easy to generate with DSP and sort of in between SSB and AM. It's basicly USB and LSB at the same time. Twice the cost of SSB in terms of power and bandwidth, but far less in power than AM.

It has the advantage that a standard AM receiver has no trouble with it.

The Sony IFC-2010 (ICF-2001D) was born because Sony had a warehouse of AM stereo decoder chips and no market for them.

At this point it would not cost a lot of money to make a dedicated DSP chip that would decode AM, DSBRC, and SSB at an IF of 445kHz. Possibly a brodcasters or radio manufacturer's association could get together and bankroll it.

Indeed. Yes, I think an approach like this would make much more sense for broadcasters given the business realities they currently face.

Yes sometimes the better "Idea" is the simpler 'idea' :

DRM requires a more complex Radio Transmission process.

Plus DRM requires a more complex Radio Receiver adding a higher initial cost to the Radio Listener to Buy the Radio to hear the Broadcast.

Perhaps replacing a low power FM TX of lets say 10w, with an L-Band TX or 100w or so. I suppose that would be financially feasible, although I'm not sure how well a low power L-Band TX would be received by in door portables.

Presumably this TX is pretty power efficient, as they could build a very efficient aerial system at L-Band frequencies. Probably not a bad idea for local fill in transmissions. But for providing terrestrial coverage over a large area, it would be better to use a frequency that travels better, and copes better with the terrain.

The Better "Idea" Gets Better !

DSB and Suppress {Reduced} Carrier has many of the Advantages of SSB : Plus the better Sound Quality of AM Radio.

- It's easy to generate with DSP and sort of in between
- SSB and AM.

YES - PLus any current AM Radio or SSB Receiver can also receive DSB Transmissions. Backward compatible with AM Radios and SSB Receivers.

- It's basicly USB and LSB at the same time.

YES - WWV/WWVH uses DSB while CHU uses USB.

- Twice the cost of SSB in terms of power and bandwidth,
- but far less in power than AM.

Redirect the Wasted AM Power to the Side-Bands

100KW AM = 50KW Carrier + 25KW LSB + 25 KW USB

100KW DSB = + 40 KW LSB + 40 KW USB & 20 KW SRAMC*
* Suppressed {Reduced} AM Carrier -result- Same Total Power Level :
But More Power To The Content : And A More Powerful Audio Stream.

- It has the advantage that a standard AM receiver
- has no trouble with it.

Yes Yes Yes - Backward compatible with AM Radios and SSB Receivers.

Plus DSB has the better Sound Quality of AM Radio and even the potential of Stereo or at least 'enhanced' Mono.

- The Sony IFC-2010 (ICF-2001D) was born because
- Sony had a warehouse of AM stereo decoder chips
- and no market for them.

Yes that brings up the 2nd Point the AM Stereo Decoder Chip Designs can be used to Detect and Receive DSB and Use it as with an AM-SYNC Function; and even the potential of Stereo or at least 'enhanced' Mono.

- At this point it would not cost a lot of money to make
- a dedicated DSP chip that would decode AM, DSBRC,
- and SSB at an IF of 445kHz.

As you have point-out SONY already has the design.
Plus Drake/Eton/Grundig also has the Designs; along with several others...

It's just a matter of starting-up production and producing a Million Chips a Month for a Year and Warehousing them and then Distributing them as they sell to meet the need...

- a brodcasters or radio manufacturer's association could
- get together and bankroll it.

Better a Consortium of Governments could simply Mandate DSB Braodcasting and Create-The-Need :
Then the Capital would Flow to It Naturally.

OBTW-IMHO : Versus IBOC for the AM/MW Radio Band DSB is the Better Idea !

-cause- Once you have the DSB Chips in the 'portable' AM/FM Shortwave Radios* : Using DSB in AM/MW Radio function is a No Cost No Brainer !
* +90% of the Sales of all Shortwave Radio World Wide.

- YES - WWV/WWVH uses DSB while CHU uses USB.

WWV/WWVH uses DSB* on 2.5 MHz; 5&10&15&20 MHz http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/WWV_%28radio_station%29#Broadcast_format

* Double Side-Band Amplitude Modulation [DSB-AM]
Most times the AM-SYNC function on my GS800-M Radio enhances the WWV Signal's Audio and does improve it's Listenability.

CHU uses USB* on 3330 kHz; 7850 kHz & 14670 kHz http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/CHU_%28radio_station%29

* Upper-Side-Band [USB] The CHU Time Signal is AM; with the LSB suppressed (Transmission Type H3E)

Most elections are about particular policies, particular scandals or particular personalities. But these issues don't mean as much this year-- not because they are not important, but because this election is a crossroads election, one that can decide what path this country will take for many years to come.

Runaway "stimulus" spending, high unemployment and ObamaCare are all legitimate and important issues. It is just that freedom and survival are more important.

For all its sweeping and scary provisions, ObamaCare is not nearly as important as the way it was passed. If legislation can become laws passed without either the public or the Congress knowing what is in those laws, then the fundamental principle of a free, self-governing people is completely undermined.

Some members of Congress who voted for ObamaCare, and who are now telling us that they realize this legislation has flaws which they intend to correct, are missing the point.

The very reason for holding hearings on pending legislation, listening to witnesses on all sides of the issue, and having Congressional debates that will be reported and commented on in the media, is so that problems can be explored and alternatives considered before the legislation is voted into law.

Rushing ObamaCare into law too fast for anyone to have read it served no other purpose than to prevent this very process from taking place. The rush to pass this law that would not take effect until after the next two elections simply cut the voters out of the loop-- and that is painfully close to ruling by decree.

Other actions and proposals by this administration likewise represent moves in the direction of arbitrary rule, worthy of a banana republic, with only a mocking facade of freedom.

These include threats against people who simply choose to express opinions counter to administration policy, such as a warning to an insurance company that there would be "zero tolerance" for "misinformation" when the insurance company said that ObamaCare would create costs that force up premiums.

Zero tolerance for the right of free speech guaranteed by the Constitution?

This warning comes from an administration with arbitrary powers that can impose ruinous costs on a given business.

Those who are constantly telling us that our economic problems are caused by not enough "regulation" never distinguish between regulation which simply enforces known rules, as contrasted with regulation that gives arbitrary powers to the government to force others to knuckle under to demands that have nothing to do with the ostensible purposes of the regulation.

As more businesses reveal that they are considering no longer buying health insurance for their employees, as a result of higher costs resulting from ObamaCare legislation, the administration has announced that it can grant waivers that reduce these costs.

But the power to grant waivers is the power to withhold waivers-- an arbitrary power that can impose millions of dollars in costs on businesses that the administration doesn't like.

Recent proposals from the Obama administration to force disclosure of the names of people who sponsor election ads would likewise open all who disagree with Obama to retaliation by the government itself, as well as by community activists and others.

History tells us where giving government one arbitrary power after another leads. It is like going into a Venus fly-trap, which is easy to enter and nearly impossible to get out of.

The headstrong, know-it-all willfulness of this administration, which threatens our freedom at home, also threatens our survival in the international jungle, because Obama seems determined to do nothing that will stop Iran from going nuclear.

The Obama administration goes through all sorts of charades at the U.N. and signs international agreements on sanctions that have been watered down to the point where they are not about to bring Iran's nuclear weapons program to a halt. The purpose is not to stop Iran but to stop the American people from realizing what Obama is doing or not doing.

We have a strange man in the White House. This election is a crossroads, because either his power will be curbed by depriving him of his huge Congressional majorities or he will continue on a road that jeopardizes both our freedom and our survival.

How many murdered 100,000,000 innocent souls in one century? And when I say "murder", I mean just that. I'm not including people killed in war. No, my friend, I'm talking death camps, death marches, deliberate starvation of entire communities.

Which is why Christian atrocities are limited to thousands dead, instead of tens of millions dead. At one point, a Christian who is out of control is slammed against the wall and asked "is this what Jesus would want?" What do you say to a murdering Atheist?

It was not, however, Atheism that murdered the people. It was fear and lust for power. That is the common thread that combines all genocides and mass killings.

So far the limit to Internet Radio {web-based-radio} is just how 'Wide' {Coverage Area} is your WiFi :
at Home; at Work in your Car/Truck; at the Hotel you are staying at . . . and the location of your next Hot-Spot !

Cellphone and iPod type G3 down-loads with subsequent Play-Back would seem to give more 'mobility' like a Pocket {portable} AM/FM/SW Radio. But mostly that is not Real-Time and for the most part AM/FM/SW Radio does offer Real-Time where you are / anywhere.

it's 'free' over-the-air am & fm shortwave radio and it is as easy as . . . just listening ~ RHF

Any fascist/dictator government can become a real pain. Just look at the old SW jammers you used to find dotting the band spreads. And, yeah, you have to use phone to run a bbs, either landline, cell or satellite. Perhaps we will have to go real retro and use the old CB bands with data encryption schemes; My crystal ball stopped working, all it shows is gray clouds.

I kinda liked the old BBS's, now-a-days, it would be like waiting for the pony express though!

Anyway, shutting down all communication would just be suicidal--I am not saying these fool criminals and treasonous-individuals we have allowed into public servant offices aren't VERY severe psycho-death-suicide-freaks--the insanity they have demonstrated is truly amazing ... but, if no one steps up to remove them and restore sanity, soon, it might be awhile before enough, get enough nerve to, do the right thing.

The types of situations you name, camping in the High Sierra, having to live in a survival situation eating food off the land, etc. leaves one little choice but for an old am/fm/sw/??? type radio. Of course one will remain with ones gold, food, blankets, tents, go-bags, etc.

However, with the coverage of some cell suppliers, I have been in some pretty remote areas and still have net access ... it has surprised me and I expect it to get only get better technology and hardware ... although, by then, we may not have the money, resources, infrastructure, etc. to implement the upgrades ...

Might just be better to a "dual system." AM would have to go, but you could run, say, USB analog and use the LSB for a digital carrier ... people would yell, scream, pull their hair out, etc. ... but we did go all digital TV and just ram it down the oppose'rs throats ... just look at the tons of old analog TV's sitting around that you can't even get a digital box to slap on now ... never say never, to anything ...

Get a proper TV with web capabilities. I have a $150 Insignia Bluray player that streams Netflix. There are standalone streamer boxes for as low as $60. Build a Linux media server for next to nothing. (They even have remote controls). My 50" DLP also has 7 inputs, 4 of which are hi-def.

Is this trip really necessary?

You are not in the backwoods. Do you still have ghettos in Jackson? In Houston and Dallas they tore down the old neighborhoods and yuppified them. Moved all the black people to the suburbs with subprime loans, then, well you know.

Can you say "drama queen"? Sure. I knew you could.

The insurance companies have [politely] "muddied the waters" regarding health insurance reform; when asked about the individual programs, without the aggregate appellation "Obamacare", the public likes it.

Congressional staff are the ones who read and write bills. They report directly to legislators. The lawmakers themselves are more often than not out fund raising. This system blows.

BP sells GS the fuel required to do the above. I think we pay over Actually, we have been taught to think in terms of hardware. The major importance has been put on hardware and "features." This is now killing SW radio ...

SW radios should be nothing more than "black boxes", it should be the software which defines the radio ... if you want to go the extra expense, pop a processor in the radio ... if not, use a computer to drive the radio ...

But, the emphasis should have went off "models" of receivers a time a ago ... this would let one change digital encryption/decrypting algorithms at will ... radio would become upgradeable without big costs ... the actual broadcasters would be the only subject of real importance ... the way it is now, the hardware is important ... and, with no broadcasters, how long can that last?

It is obvious, SDR radios should be the standard today ... like it or not, you will, in the end, realize that is correct ... however, it may already be too late for even this to save SW ...

JS

It all can be summed up, which the article did pretty well is that people in affluent countries don't listen to shortwave radio. They prefer to get their news from more reliable (and probably more slanted in their direction sources).

The other day I was listening to CRI (China Radio International's) southwest Asia broadcast in English. They referred often to their website. If you have internet access, you can hear their archive of programs, send them emails with reception reports or questions, and so on.

If you don't you can send them mail (postal address given).

IMHO it's a decent mixture of reality and desire. SW broadcasts for those that want to listen to them, or don't have internet access, and internet availability for those that do.

At least here, CRI has replaced the BBC or Radio Moscow with being the all bands all the time radio station. If you had a shortwave radio in the 1960's, 1970's or 1980's you know exactly what I mean.

The reality of it all is that there are far more people out there with shortwave radios with AM reception and nothing else, who are lucky if they have some way of powering them. Computers and internet access are a dream, not anything they have ever seen.

The just don't happen to be in the US, Canada or the EU.

I disagree. Maybe where you live, or even where I live, but not where 99% of the listeners of SW live.

SDRs are overly complicated and expensive for the handful of people who are not hams who listen to SW broadcasts and want an expensive radio.

If you want an SDR, go ahead and buy it. But don't expect people who live in a village with a combined income less than the price of one radio to do it. There are a lot more of them than there are of you.

However you never know, it turns out that according to a recent study, now floating around the internet, there are more people in India with cell phones than people who have access to a private (or any) toilet.

There isn't a friggin chance that a small percentage change in the scum in office can or will change anything. The slime you vote for don't rule your lives; you do. Possibly even up to 20% of the population does and can control the direction of the country you live in. The other 80% are parasites. The 20% have 1) escaped to a more functional country, or, waddled off to vote, which accomplishes the same thing as turning your underwear inside out.

November 2 only changes who is shoving the pipe up your ass. You've seen this same phenomenon all your lives - what changes? The initial after the bloodsucker's name, the percentage of your money that is confiscated, and an ongoing lowering of your living standard.

If the toilette is completely flushed and replaced with people with no R or D behind their names, there is a small chance the US can be fixed. As it stands, the core economic base is gone, is not returning, and the population, becoming predominantly 3rd world, will simply elect the criminals that promise the most handouts.

See, you are still thinking in hardware, models, a "new one", etc., etc. ...

If SDR goes mass production, there will be few "models", more like one model per manufacturer. The SDR will like be priced $19.95-$99.95USD, depending on how extravagant you wish to go ... and, of course, the $100USD one will have the processor onboard ...

Yes. Will someone, somewhere, please tell the circus, the ones with the smoke-and-mirrors and the pony-shows we have had quite enough of their "entertainment." Tell them go to prison, do not pass go, do not collect $200 dollars ... we have had quite enough ... thank you.

It's worse than "muddied the waters," they've been sponsoring dysinformation campaigns since before Obama was elected. They've convinced half the dumb-ass seniors in the country that Health reform is going to rob them of Medicade, a program they actively tried to kill when Gingrich was the majority leader.

Single election should not be changing much in a relatively free and prosperous society. That's what Democrats tried to do, and the likely Republican sweep is in large part a reaction to that coup attempt. The hope that it will give birth to a strong political movement for years to come.

A small change in the balance changes nothing useful, except for punishment of the slime currently scamming the sheep, and that's a good thing. Nothing else will result following the Nov. 2 charade.

Nothing can change until the behavior of the population changes - what will bring that about? 1) A very serious, long term depression (nothing to stop that) or 2) a serious, deep realization that squealing for handouts and the mental instability that causes the sheep to think their destiny is NOT in the hands of the DC slimeballs. Option 2 won't happen; option 1 likely will.

It can be anything or nothing - R vs D is not the solution, it is probably the number one mental affliction that caused the demise in the first place.

You are not aware that there are SDR's which can be controlled by computer, as well as be stand alone?

They are stand alone with but the addition of a processor and some memory ... but, why duplicate the sound card, the oscillator, etc. if you are always going to have a computer present?

People still think in terms of stand alone, like you do. However, why own a TV, a radio, a stereo, etc.? The computer is all of this, and more ... usually a simple USB device is all which is necessary to make the computer pretty much anything you wish ... however, manufacturers would like to sell you a, stand alone, separate device for each and every different task you wish to preform ... it is my opinion only idiots will continue down that road ... a desktop controls most of all this in my home ... my fondness for collectibles is only why I own so many stand alone, and ancient, AM, FM, SW, ham, cb, etc. ... I prefer a notebook with a small SDR even when I camp ... however, I do carry along backup. A small inverter allows me to operate these in my vehicle and a small generator supplies power at the camp sites ...

I strongly believe most will be heading in these directions ... it is only salespeople in electronic stores who slow the upgrading ...

You don't read history?

"Revolutionists" are who put this great democracy in place and upheld it, until recently ... when, now, power seems to have been usurped from the individuals who really are "the country", "the government" and the only true holders of the right(s) to do so ...

No, I am not for allowing this country to become a "bad democracy", we seem to have that now ... we don't need "leaders" we need the public servants which the constitution sets up and gives rights to represent the will of the people.

Yes, but your are IMHO mixing up two types of listeners. The listeners that the stations are not trying to reach are afluent, have a computer, probably have a TV, some sort of video player (DVD, Blu-Ray,VCR, PVR, or streamer), an internet connection and so on.

Those are the kind that would gladly buy an SDR because they like the toy aspect and want to listen to SWBC as a hobby.

On the other side of the equation are what I think is almost all of their audience, people who do not have computers, can not afford more than a cheap radio, and will never have an internet connection until it is free or close to it.

The proof is where do the SWBC stations aim their signal? Not at North America, not at the EU, etc, but at poor parts of the world, North and Central Africa, Western Asia (middle east and India) and Eastern Asia (China, North Korea, Indonesia, and so on).

This is no duplication of processor, memory, keyboard, display, etc because these people don't have them.

An SDR radio is fine if you can make one for a few dollars that will stand a great deal of abuse and use very little power. As an add on for a computer, they will only sell in the richer countries or the more affluent cites, where there are lots of other sources of information and the SWBC stations are not aiming at.

I don't even consider 3rd world nations. I don't care what goes on in 3rd world nations, their needs, trends, work-arounds, etc.

That would only be a waste of my time. I live here in America. If I take a trip there and live there a bit, I will "do as the natives do."

In America, I believe this is what will be happening ... if you are in another country ... well, I see them wearing American t-shirts and jeans which appear to have been given to them by aid organizations ... perhaps they will start finding computers and SDR's in those gift packages ...

Really. I think the processor needed to drive a standalone SDR would be village library ... but then, who really cares about 3rd world nations?

The American Revolution was about disengaging from British rule, not about overthrowing government. The colonists wanted to retain their colonial governments, sans Royal governors, and rule themselves. For example, when the Royal Governor of Virginia disbanded the Virginia House of Burgesses, they simply reconvened in a Tavern and plotted joining with the other colonies to oust the useless British, who taxed but didn't defend, who controlled all aspects of colonial economics, who kept colonials in debt and bled the colonies white. In addition, the British had forbidden Western expansion beyond what is now Eastern Ohio, limiting opportunities. In any event, that revolution was about retaining local democratic-republican forms, about local rule, and about cutting the cord with the Mother Country. Remember, when the Whiskey Rebellion challenged the Federal Government of the young United States, President George Washington donned his old uniform himself and led the federal troops who suppressed it.

The Rightwing (and Leftwing) nutcases who start posturing with threats of violent revolution today are all about destroying Government. That type of revolution almost invariably leads to excess and finally to dictatorship. We're nowhere near that point, of course. For the most part, the American people are sane and responsible. There is anger and frustration out there but not enough to force a rebellion.

- It all can be summed up, which the article did pretty well is that people
- in affluent countries don't listen to shortwave radio. They prefer to get
- their news from more reliable (and probably more slanted in their direction
- sources).

Shortwave Radio Listening can be "IF'fy" and the Sound Quality can be very poor -so- Why Listen to Shortwave Radio : When you have other 'options' ?

Hear the BBC News on many NPR Radio Stations.
Watch the BBC News on many PBS TV Stations.
Watch the BBC Channel on the Cable/Satellte Network.

-but- Many/Most of the major {former} International {Government Run/Controlled} Shortwave Radio Broadcasters do have the same News 'Content' available via their Websites for People to Listen to.

=WRT= Domestic Audio Content for Consumers : Got To Tell 'The People' What They Want To Hear !

- The other day I was listening to CRI (China Radio International's)
- southwest Asia broadcast in English. They referred often to their
- website. If you have internet access, you can hear their archive of
- programs, send them emails with reception reports or questions,
- and so on.

Yes CRI is everywhere on the Shortwave Radio Bands and now on a few FM Radio Stations in the USA.

Somewhere I read that the CRI English website is Blocked to Internal Chinese Internet Addresses.

- The reality of it all is that there are far more people
- out there with shortwave radios with AM reception
- and nothing else, who are lucky if they have some
- way of powering them.

Hence the original 'FreePlay' AM/FM/SW Radios with

Here in Korea, CRI has such a strong signal that any shortwave radio, even

We need an Initiative in the State of California to have

Given the Voters a Real Voting Choice :

[X] None of the Above [.] -aka- [X] Throw the Bums Out !

Plus -if- "None of the Above" gets the Most Votes :
Then 'All-of-the-Above' could NOT be on the next Ballot :
REJECTED [Scarp Them All] -and- Get an Entirely New List of Candidates to Consider for the New Ballot.

In the State of California - I have always thought that -if-

Then a Three Term Limit for any one Elected Office is

County-Wide Elected Offices
State Assembly has a 3-Term Limit @ 6 Years
State Senate has a 2-Term Limit 8 Years Total Governor has a 2-Term Limit 8 Years Total State-Wide Elected Offices

RHF, a lot of time, you have good input ...

The freeplays should be in everyones' gobag ... they are great.

I have a 250 Watt solar setup which recharges NICAD Aviation Cells, 5X50W panels, 40AMP/HR 14V NICAD storage.

It would be my back up ... I have a tiny generator and a large 10KW at the cabin ... but, I have a freeplay in the gobag ...

Should You Buy Store Brand Canned Goods or Brand Name?

With America in a push to save money in all areas, the question looms whether you should purchase store brand canned goods or brand name items. The answer is: both. There are both pros and cons of purchasing store brand items versus brand name items that includes more than just price.

When to Buy Store Brand Goods

Many store brand canned goods for basic items such as canned vegetables, frozen vegetables, and basic supplies (sugar, flour, etc.) are just as good as or better than the name brand items. Often, these items are canned and/or packaged in the same location as the name brand items making them the same exact item. If you are planning on using the item in a recipe with other ingredients, consider using store brand items. (After all, a can of corn is still a can of corn, despite the label that the can might have.) Other items that can usually be purchased in the store brand name with little or no difference are baking supplies and mixes, pastas, vegetables (canned or frozen), and canned fruits. For basic cleaning items, such as bleach and dish soap, this is also a good alternative.

When to Buy Brand Named Goods(http//:www.supertradeonline06.com)

However, when it comes to certain items, brand names are better. For example, if you are purchasing baked beans for a family barbeque, a brand name recipe would be a far better purchase despite a little excess cost. Many times these brand name recipes vary so much between brand types that a store name item does not begin to compare. Salad dressings, seasoning mixes, pasta sauces, salsa, and anything else that has a specific brand recipe or style should be purchased by brand name. Laundry detergents, heavy duty cleansers, and automatic dishwashing soaps should also be purchased by brand name, as often times store brands do not have the same disinfecting abilities as store brand cleaning products. Meats should also always be purchased by brand name, as these companies often have more safeguards in place to secure safe FDA meat handling practices.

Real radios should weigh at least 60 pounds. A hernia can be obtained from lifting a cellphone (almost any body action which involves motion) . And BHO should pick up the bill ,at least that was his

- - How many innocent people did Christians
- - send to death camps in the 20th century?

- The original 20th century death camps were built
- to wipe out the Boers by the British military.

ARTHRNY,

Point-of-Fact : The British used "Concentration Camps" http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Internment#British_Camps_and_the_Boer_War to take the Boer People OFF the Land and deny popular support to the Boer 'Guerrilla' Army http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Second_Boer_War http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Guerrilla_warfare Often the Result of being place in one of the British Internment Camps was Death for the Boer Women and Children : Making Them De-Facto Death Camps for Innocent Civilians {A War Crime and Genocide}.

Also the British destroyed and depopulated the Boer Farms, Villages and Towns using "Scorched Earth" !
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Scorched_Earth {Crimes Against the Earth : Ecolocide©}

The British were also famous for Ethnic Cleansing in 18th Century North America : That is how the Cajuns got forced out of Acadia and ended up in Louisiana Region. {A War Crime and Genocide}.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ethnic_cleansing http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cajuns http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Louisiana http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Acadia
During the US Civil War both sides had an Atrocious {Criminal} Prisoner-of-War Prison Record :
* Most have heard of the South's Infamous Andersonville, GA Prison "Death Camp" http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Andersonville_National_Historic_Site
* But fewer have heard of the North's "Death Camps"
* * Camp Douglas (Chicago, IL)
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Camp_Douglas_%28Chicago%29
* * Elmira, NY Prison {some claim the Deadliest Prison of the Civil War}

Band allocations and time zone conversions for the USA. Includes broadcast bands used outside the USA. For multi-use bands, primary usage is shown.
Some stations operate outside official bands. Information is from Oct 2008 FCC rules and Sep 2009 NTIA manual, see Chapter 4 of:
http://www.ntia.doc.gov/osmhome/redbook/redbook.html

Frequencies are in kHz. Usual spacing in shortwave broadcast bands is 5 kHz. Frequencies above 10000 kHz tend to propagate better during the day; frequencies below 10000 kHz tend to propagate better at night.

Phone line as SW antenna

Changes preceded by "|".

WARNINGS AND DISCLAIMERS

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area.
Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines | usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because | DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the | telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead.
Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including | ringing, so that they will not harm the receiver. The capacitor should | be rated 250 volts or higher.

Phone line RF connector
red .01 uF center cond. / \ or o--------||-----------------------------|-o | To receiver
green \ /
50 ohm coax |
ground |
or o-----------------------------------------+ N.C. shield

N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:

Phone line RF connector
red -------- center cond. / \
or o----| |-------------------------|-o | To receiver
green | | \ /
| FILTER | 50 ohm coax |
ground | | |
or o----| |----------------------------+

| Model 420 HF lowpass filter (30 MHz lowpass)

| If you have a random-wire antenna, the following unit will provide | impedance matching and lightning protection (connect antenna to 450-ohm | terminal):

FILTER PLANS

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
{ {
} }
-------------+-----------+-----------------

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.
(a close value will do).

From: bill@videovax.tv.tek.com (William K. McFadden)
Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

LOW-PASS FILTER (Rejects FM, TV, etc.)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

The proper way to connect them is in series, i.e.

signal in ------- filter 1 -------- filter 2 -------- signal out

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics, left and right ends are interchangeable.)

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

Well in the 20th Century some would 'claim' that except for a few Prison Free Zones :

* The Entire USSR under STALIN was a Death Camp http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Joseph_Stalin#Calculating_the_number_of_victims

* All of China under MAO's during the Cultural Revolution was a Death Camp

* All of Cambodia under POLPOT was a Death Camp

* The HITLER "Concentration Camps" were Death Camps

All were Communist Regimes except the NAZIs

Actually, the illegitimate system that misrules us has "got you" either way, vote or no vote.

If you _did_ vote, they tell you "Well, you had your say and your side lost. You have no right to complain."

If you _didn't_ vote, they tell you "Well, you had your chance and you refused to participate. You have no right to complain."

Either way, _you have no right to complain_.

That's more Kafkaesque than Kafka.

The truth is, as long as morons and the rabble of the cities can vote (which the founders never intended and which is actually illegal), we will always live under the tyranny of the billionaire oligarchs -- whose media are designed to control the votes of that credulous and gullible majority.

With every good wish,

You say that like "shortwave" is something other than an informal name for a span of frequencies. It's always been "International" broadcasting. It used to be shortwave, then shortwave and satellite. Now it's satellite, web stream, and a smattering of HF; but it's still International broadcasting. Yes, they care enough about me to allow to listen 24/7 static free.

It is a huge expense (and waste of electricity) to beam via HF. No frugal government in their right mind can justify the expense.

The government has already been overthrown. That was obvious last summer

You may wish to consider that as long as he's been an SWL, dozens of countries have redefined their boundaries, changed their names, or been formed out of other countries after revolution, or poltical upheaval. One could, for instance, from the same station in Slovakia, and received three QSL's from three different countries.

It is here I must caution you, it does no good. Remember when we used to challenge ourselves against excellence and those who did better or beat us? Remember Sputnik? The russians got a satellite up there first? We went into a major race against them and whipped their little behinds?

Then, remember this "new crowd" who constantly measures us against 3rd world nations? And, how, in the end, it has brought us down to near 3rd world status?; And, we even fall further as I write this?

Comparing us against 3rd world nations and causing guilt feelings for excellence is sicko. Homosexuals and godless morons persist in this practice, for what reason, I do not know ... perhaps a symptom of their disease ...

What I do know is we need to measure ourselves against the best. We need to constantly challenge ourselves to do better than what we have done before; Better than what we did yesterday ... mindless, un-excelling goons, simpletons and idiots measure themselves against poverty, defeat, starvation, failure, slovenly behaviors, laziness, etc.

Why these sick b*st*rds are left unchallenged to coax Americans, through guilt and deception, into failure and 3rd world status simply disgusts me ... but we seem to have an abundance of these fools here with us ...

Probably us falling into 'third world status' has nothing to do with your 'guilt and deception'.

I think you are overlooking the obvious. The USA is just too expensive any more. First to Mexico, now China and India and probably Africa after that.

You are simply telling me what my treasonous-criminal-public-servants are doing ... yes, we are going to have to tell them NO! Put high tariffs on all imports, bring jobs back to American, we are NOT interested in participating in a world government, world society, or world anything ... we want things fixed ... there is not anything we can't do for ourselves ... and we sure as heck don't need cheap slave labor in other countries to make banksters and wall street rich.

And yes, the public servants who think they have usurped power are racing us towards the bottom and economic slavery ... I want them and the banksters and wall street there ...

Yes. It is how the rich elite are draining the American standard of living and attempting to place us in the same slavery and starving conditions as the morons they are exploiting ... the morons here had better wake up soon or they will have us all there.

What made America outstanding was one simple principle, most of all, and that is, "A fair days work for a fair days wage." And, "If you make it overseas, sell it overseas!"

Speak for yourself.

For me, the biggest problem with shortwave is manmade noise. And has been for about the past 20 years or so I've been living in big cities.
Being able to hear anything more than the half-dozen or dozen strongest signals means getting out of town.

I'll be damned if I have to take a computer with me camping (and then bother with shielding it so I don't have to hear the sort of RF crud I just drove out of the city to get away from) as well as a radio set.
Oh, and then there's the extra power consumption (remember, I'm using batteries out in the woods) of a computer just because a radio doesn't have a front panel anymore. Plus, I can't see having to fiddle with a mouse pointer on a picture of a tuning knob as any sort of improvement of having a real tuning knob to turn.

Hi all

I have an Eton E5 SW radio, I love listening to broadcasts from all over the world, but I've had this radio for a few years now... and there is one problem. I still have no clue how to work the SSB function.

I've read the manual and looked some stuff up online, but whenever I try to use SSB all I get is a high pitched squeal. I see videos of people using an E5 on SSB and they're getting clear signals that aren't distorted- when I use my SSB button the station comes in all muffled sounding and even with careful tuning I can never get it to sound good.

What is the point of SSB, when should I use it, how do I use it?

Thanks for any help.

Receivers having a single conversion have the lowest internally generated noise ,I believe. It may be possible to have SDR with better performance,eventually one day. Actually,any receiver having an oscillator generates birdies. A PC or a laptop generate more RF than the Woodpecker transmissions from years ago.

Losers like the company of other losers. Daewoo went bancrupt in the late 90's. What a shame... Anyways, GM discontinued OLDSmobile brand in 2004,obviously not because BHO was getting into politics in Illinois. And Buick brand is still around- last I heard GM was selling more Buicks in PRC than in the US ! "Mark of Exellence". What a joke.

First of all you have to understand what SSB is. A normal AM signal consists of three things. The first is a carrier signal which is always on, the other two are the information you want to hear, which are called sidebands.

Since the sidebands are what you need, you can remove the carrier entirely and still have a useable signal. That's where DSB or DSRC (double sideband reduced carrier) signals come from. They can be received as an AM signal by an AM receiver with far less power used by the transmitter.

Now what would happen if you only transmitted the information you needed to make up the full signal? It so happens that both sidebands are the same, being mirror images of each other.

So one can transmit the same INFORMATION, using a lot less power by transmitting only one of the sidebands. The problem is that without a carrier, or both sidebands a regular AM receiver can not decode the information.

The question is how do you get it back?

Normally this is done by mixing a new carrier with the signal, and stripping out what you don't want. There are various methods for doing this, but they all rely on the frequencies matching. On an SSB signal if the frequencies match exactly, the sound seems "normal" if they are too high or low or vary, the signal gets that funny distortion that sounds like the rebel pilots in the final attack on the death star in Star Wars.

Now here comes the problem with SSB and shortwave listening. If you use SSB to receive an AM signal, and the carrier frequencies don't exactly match, or are not stable, you get a howl. The howl is the mixing product of the two mismatched signals.

If you tune them to the point that they match exactly, that's where the magic happens. As a shortwave signal fades in an out, the reception of it gets better and worse. If you mix a carrier with the fading carrier and replace it, the information you want is still received and the fading dissapears.

This is called ECSS. In order to work, it requires a frequency stable transmitter and receiver and exact tuning.

If you don't have the exact tuning you need, or a stable enough receiver, then it won't work and will howl. Therefore not many people use SSB receivers for AM reception.

If you want to receive SSB signals, there are occasionaly a few of them on shortwave broadcasts. It's not that popular because the majority of shortwave listeners in the world don't have receivers capable of SSB reception.

You are most likely to hear SSB signals on the ham bands and utility frequencies. From international aircraft flight controlers to fishing boats too far off shore for VHF and so on. Most of them are USB (upper side band), but ham transmissions on the 1.8mHz,3.5mHz and 7.0mHz bands are usually LSB (lower side band).

Except on the US 5mHz band, where USB is required, hams may use either USB or LSB, but the convention is LSB below 10mHz.

Geoff.

MrRas,

Some Things about SW Radios is a 'natural'
{no learning required or learned it before} You Know how to Turn 'On'; Tune; and Set the Sound Level of an AM/FM Radio : Same for SW Radios.

-and- Some Things about SW Radios is a 'Skill' {requires that you lean some thing new and practice the process to develop 'the skill'}
The SSB Fine-Tuning Knob is a new SW Radio
'Skill' that you must Learn by using and doing.

First Setting-Up the SW Radio :

On the Right-Side there is the "Fine-Tuning" Knob/Wheel : Set this Knob to it's Center.
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/portable/0055side.html

-tip- You should 'feel' a Bump/Notch as you trun the Knob somewhere around the Center of It's Range of Travel : Full CW to Full CCW.

Now look for come consistent SSB Signals to Practice your SSB Tuning Skills.

Where you might start is at the WWV/WWVH Time Frequencies which are really not AM Signals
-but- DSB Signals with Suppressed/Reduced AM Carrier [Double Side-Bands Lower & Upper]

So in the AM Mode : Tune your SW Radio to :
2.5 MHz {2,500 kHz},; 5 MHz {5,000 kHz},
10 MHz {10,000 kHz}, 15 MHz {15,000 kHz}
Choose the one that gives you the best Signal.

-INFO- Time Signals
http://www.dxinfocentre.com/time.htm

Next you have a "SSB" Button (8) on the Front of the SW Radio : [Mono & Stereo & SSB]
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/portable/0055cont.html Press it once and wait to see if "SSB" shows up in the LCD Display (24) Press it a second time and wait to see if "SSB" shows up in the LCD Display (24) STOP When You See the "SSB" in the LCD Display.
-tip- You are now in the "SSB" Receive Mode.

IF You are Tuned directly on one of the WWV/WWVH Time Signals and can hear it well.
Plus in the "SSB" Receive Mode with the 'SSB'
Fine-Tuning Knob 'Centered' :
You can now slowly rotate the 'SSB' Fine-Tuning Knob CW and hear one of the Side-Bands.
Re-Center the 'SSB' Fine-Tuning Knob
Now you can slowly rotate the 'SSB' Fine-Tuning Knob CCW and hear the 'other' of the Side-Bands.

After you have Practiced with WWV/WWVH several times and can develop your 'Skill' using the 'SSB' Fine-Tuning expand out . . .

Note - That you can also do this with other
"AM" Mode SW Broadcasts that are very loud and clear on your Radio. {Improve Your Skill}

NEXT - Try looking for some of the Fixed Frequency
'Utility' SSB Broadcasters that use "USB" Mode [USB = Upper {Single} Side-Band]
http://www.monitoringtimes.com/html/mttopHF.html
* Tune-in to the Fixed Frequency
* Set to "SSB" Mode

* Rotate the 'SSB' Fine-Tuning Knob CW/CCW to hear the Upper Side-Band [USB].

LAST - You can try the Amateur/Ham Bands using your new "SSB" Tuning 'Skills'.

hth - good luck with your radio ~ RHF

Started raining heavily here less than an hour ago.Already, Mary Wieden, (she is originally from Michigan.She used to have her own trivia radio talk show in Jackson) flying around in Skycopter 3 (WLBT 3) has reported no less than seven auto accidents in the metro area.It is going to be rainy all day long and maybe tomorrow too.It keeps the auto body repair shops happy.

I trust my driving, but I Don't trust those mofos driving at all! That's why I don't drive in rainy weather unless I absolutely have to.

If I remember correctly, the strongest AM station, ever, here in the USA was a 500,000KW or 0.5MW. Might have been WOR many decades ago ... anyway, people complained about coming over their toasters, dental appliances, etc.

1.5MW I just can't imagine on AM! I guess if you have a message that people just don't want to hear, you have to shout LOUDER! lol

In -theory-, you are absolutely correct. However, in actual practice, tell me when the cheap Chinese labor and cheap Wal-Mart prices go away, how long do you think it will be until the American consumer starts rioting? (You do realze that when the 15 cent an hour Chinese labor goes to $15 dollars an hour American labor, that prices WILL go up, waaay up.)

Ooh..ooh...[waving hand}...Teacher!, I've got this one.

Yes. Actually, we need to rethink the nature of wealth, in THIS country. Where the real root of wealth is. Over the last century, well, 60 years of it, we've gone from a manufacturing economy, to a merchant economy. Rather than building and selling, we've elected to buy and resell. Shifting the liability of labor to other entities as a cost saving measure. Even though we still have robust manufacturing activity in this country. We still build most of the world's cars, for instance. With more foreign plants being built on American soil even as we discuss this.

But, it's HOW we use labor that renders the difference in how we're ranked in the Global Economy.

In our own MBA driven business culture, we've attempted to offload all costs to other entities, to drive up profits, and the stock price. Because we've looked at labor as a liability. Rather than an asset. Shifting the cost of labor to overseas manufacturers. Attempting, as it were, to conserve our way to prosperity, by eliminating most, if not all, production costs.

In this way, we've allowed other cultures to do our manufacturing for us on their home soil, in plants owned by foreign companies. WE simply place orders, buy commodities, and take a markup. Avoiding labor, benefits and pension liabilities, and saving, often--though not always--a huge tax burden.

Those same other nations, on the other hand, come to this country for non-union labor, and build their own products, for sales and export, in factories of THEY own. Saving some on labor, benefits and pension costs, and snapping up huge tax incentives, but retaining the true source and origination of wealth: The engine of production. Because they view labor as an asset. The major car companies come to this country and purchase our labor, but build in their own plants. From raw materials, to end product. The finished product, in that case, is owned by themselves. To be sold by themselves. With all markups, handling fees, retained by the company. They have higher costs, in that they have physical plant overhead, but, they have control over the profit produced by the product at each stage of handling.

In the US MBA driven model, only the cost of the commodity is borne by the company. With profits controllable at stages between purchase of the finished product and beyond. Where as the foreign model, the profits begin with the acquisition of raw materials. And along each stage of production. Further, labor at each stage produces wages at each stage, which produces economic vigor that the 'merchant' economy does not.

What this means, is that we do have cheaper products on the market, in many cases than could be produced by our own hands. However, QC, and the enormous infrastructure of production, which injects robust economic yield into our own GDP, belong to foreign nationals.

Put in a single sentence: We purchase products. THEY purchase labor.

In the end, business people are business people, foreign or domestic, and we still pay the infractucture costs of the foreign manufacturer through wholesale prices, but we then, also pay for costs of replacement (and rarely, repair) of inferior products, while at the mercy of suppliers who may not be as interested in meeting our demands as we are theirs.

An on-topic reference: The Lex-Tecs-Pass-dig-sahn line of Grundig receivers. QC has often been dreadful. Repair is difficult to come by. RNW's Tom Sundstrom's review of SAT 800 required how many units to get to ONE that worked?

(Drake could have built the same radio for only a modest price increase in their own plant in China, and avoided the QC issues. Instead of Lextronix allowing Tecsun to not only build the radio, but then steal the design and release it worldwide under their own brand. Good decision, Lextronix. Go, team.)

But not all American companies work according to today's MBA driven model. Aspen Pittman, of Groove Tubes fame, built his products in China, with parts garnered from around the world, and with subsystems built in the US, but in plants that he built, and he retained ownership of. Purchasing local labor, as a raw material. For Groove Tubes, the engine of production was retained by the company, not subcontracted to a foreign partner. IN this way, Groove Tubes retained QC, and all the profits along the way from acquisition of raw materials to market sales. Granted, his products were not dirt cheap. But they were better than competitively priced, and they were of distinctively high quality.

But the key was that GT retained the engine of production. Labor was of foreign hire. But the actual WORK done by labor, was considered an asset, and that was retained in ownership by the company.

So, if we really wanted to end the race to the bottom/economic slavery of today's American economy, we'll start putting a value on labor, again. Because labor is the very foundation of wealth. We need to see it as an asset. Not a liability.

Prices would rise, to be sure. But, but because we could still build offshore but in American owned plants, prices would not rise as cataclysmically as if we simply shut off the spigot of foreign labor and built everything here.

Further, by building in American owned plants offshore, and working, now, hand-in-glove as equal entities with foreign ownership in the manufacturing realm, American companies would become more competitive with domestically produced goods, and even, as Toyota and GM had done for decades, build each other's products, wherever the plant best equipped to do so was located.

So, to address your question, to begin the transition back to an American manufacturing economy, which we could do tomorrow, if we wished, the infrastructure is still in place, we'd simply have to begin looking at labor as an asset, instead of a liability. Once harnessed, that asset would drive what was to follow.

All but 200 billion of TARP is already paid back. Chrysler I believe is paid back. GM will eventually pay back 100% plus a profit.

The only crisis is in the news media and its tenuous grip on the facts.

(Why won't the big media complain about money in politics? Because they are the recipients of all the dirty money!)

You made a big ass incorrect assumption that manufacturers would pass their savings on to their customers; they don't. They pocket the difference. You get fucked, or you get fucked.

That creates two even bigger problems than not being able to listen to shortwave in the comfort of my own living room:

a) no friends nearby, and
b) no jobs nearby.

So, aside from being stuck by my lonesome with no source of income, it's a simply perfect solution.

A good example is Ten-tec's new Chinese CW rig. Originally designed by a Chinese ham who owned an electronics factory, they sold as kits on eBay for $100.

Then they were imported to Canada as finished units by a relative of the factory owner and sold to US hams without the relevant FCC approval, for $150.

Ten-Tec now buys them, obtained FCC approval and re-sells them for $250.
The difference between the original units is that they were three band, but would not pass FCC approval, and the Ten-Tec ones do, but are two band.

They also come with full Ten-Tec support, a warranty, and probably some sort of QA testing in the US.

Quite simply, you get what you pay for and pay for what you get.

A 100% markup is not unusual for radios. For computers, it's much lower which is why so many computers don't work out of the box. :-(

BTW, at the same time, Ten-Tec announced a US designed and made rig with a lot more capability and features at a much larger price.

Geoff.

Why punish the Chinese working man? Why not lay the blame on the greedy American business owners that went to China -- or <gasp!> blame it on the American consumer that just loves those cheap prices.

Robust? On this we differ. HUNDREDS of THOUSANDS of manufacturing jobs lost in this country and still going in the wrong direction. Virtually the entire tool & die industry gone (maybe because there is no manufacturing here to support it?) It seems almost -everything-, from brake pads to bed pans, is "Made in China". I would respectfully Huh? "Conserve our prosperity"? Is that why our middle class is rapidly disappearing? Why tens of millions of people are without work? THAT "prosperity"? I think the MBAs dropped the ball on this one.

Again, we differ on the meaning of a word -- 'ownership'. It is common knowledge that no foreigner can "own" a plant or business in China; rather, they have to partner with the Chinese government.

Yes, I guess we could start up the American manufacturing economy tomorrow, but per my original contention, it may not be economically viable. Labor costs go from pennies per hour to dollars per hour, health costs, virtually zero in China, are a very expensive item here, environmental controls, a large and expensive issue here, are virtually nil in China, ditto for pension liabilities, the tax breaks for going overseas would be lost. Why would any manufacturer in their right mind want to start producing here again given the issues above?

Of course, what the overseas manufactures seem to be failing to realize is that, if you don't have a job, it ultimately will make no difference how cheap a product is.

Quite so. It's why spy agencies still use numbers stations to disseminate messages to their agents. It is also why this scenario:

> The Shortwave Radio Broadcasters have to see some > ROI coming out of DRM; or they simply will move on > to the Internet Radio & TV and Satellite Radio & TV

... probably won't come to pass in the immediate future (if at all). It's too easy to track people using the Internet (or simply cut them off). Satellites aren't there yet (who wants to pack a 60cm dish in their luggage). When there is a good choice of free to air* direct broadcast satellites that are as easy and simple to receive as Sirius currently is, then MAYBE shortwave will truly be obsolete. (Maybe. It is technologically feasible to shoot missiles at satellites, after all.)

Until then, a message that can be received on shortwave with poor audio quality beats a message that cannot be received at all via Internet or a satellite. Anyone who has bought into the DRM hype and is ready to leave shortwave in a huff will eventually and to their regret end up realizing this.

* Pay to view won't work; the same governments that don't want "their" citizens listening to certain messages will threaten to cut off payments from within their borders to foreign pay DBS satellite services that fail to muzzle the messages they (such governments) find offensive. The only way you can broadcast messages to areas where governments don't want them heard is to give them away.

 Several dozen providers, both publicly and privately owned, with ownership based in a wide range of nations, not all of who ideologically see eye to eye. If the USA wants to cut off a certain message, that message has to be able to go to a Venezuelan (or Russian, or Chinese, or wherever) DBS satellite serving the same target area. (Swap nation names as you see fit here; all examples are equally valid.) Anything less than that standard means shortwave still has a role to play.

The wood opened as the hunters went on, and the trees grew to a vast height, but none had edible fruits. Pencroff sought in vain for some of those precious palm trees, which lend themselves so wonderfully to the needs of mankind, and which grow from 40° north latitude to 35° south. But this forest was composed only of conifers, such as the deodars, already recognized by Herbert; the Douglas pines, which grow on the northeast coast of America; and magnificent fir trees, 150 feet high. Among their branches was fluttering a flock of birds, with small bodies and long, glittering tails. Herbert picked up some of the feathers, which lay scattered on the ground, and looked at them carefully.

For exactly the reasons I stated: If we put a value on labor here, and stop selling that asset in this country, while buying it overseas, we can start benefiting from the chain of wealth created by the labor on our own soil. Labor costs can be exchanged with other manufacturers. Few realize how many Toyotas, for instance, were built in this country by General Motors, and American workers. While at the same time, Hyundai, BMW, Honda, Mazda, Mitsubish and Mercedes-Benz was building in this country with American labor. The difference being that they retained owership of that labor product. In other words, instead of buying a commodity and then reselling it on home soil, they produced the commodity retaining owership of it throughout the chain of production, and profited at each stage. But always owning the engine of production, and using labor as an asset, not a liability.

While GM, and Chrysler, but to a lesser extent, Ford, looked at labor strictly as a liability, and attempted to offload much of it to foreign manufacturers because of the legacy costs.

There is no doubt that labor in this country is expensive. With legacy costs that extend far beyond the assets of current work product. That cannot be sustained. Primarily, especially in the auto business, when the legacy costs of pension and benefits are shifted from the Unions, to the manufacturers. That's economic suicide. And it's had the auto industry on the ropes since the late 50's. But, there is a correction for that.

Before that shift, and in other unions as well, pension and benefits were handled by the Union, not the manufacturer. That was one of the benefits of membership. It did two things, immediately. One was that the company had a manageable budget for labor costs, with contractually contained wages. Higher than non-union in many, but not all cases. But predictable, and containable. Which kept final prices manageable, and quality higher. The other thing it did, was allow for fluctuations in the market without putting the viability of the company at risk.

For instance, when Ford's sales slumped, but GM's peaked, workers would be laid off at Ford, while GM was hiring. But Ford still had legacy costs of labor that could not be scaled back with down trending sales. And vested workers would be penalized with loss of benefits if they moved from Ford to GM to take advantage of the shifted corporate fortunes and new hiring. When Chrysler would boom and Ford and GM would slump, workers, again, would be penalized if they moved to where the work was. Because the companies were paying the benefits and pension costs. But if the Unions were paying benefits and pensions, the workers would be able to move between companies to take advantage of openings, without loss of benefits or pensions. And through Union organization, even seniority could be retained.

I'm a member of two Unions. In each case, pension and benefits are paid by the Union out of dues collected. The companies only hire my labor, and pay me a wage. So I'm free to work where I choose. Where the work is. And move between opportunities at will.

Spreading that model throughout the labor force, would change much about the liabilities of purchasing labor in the US. It would also allow companies, again, to see labor as an asset, not as a liabiilty.

The MBA Mentality extends to our Elected Officials

20%~25% constant un-employment / under-employment Rate and a perpetual under-class of people who never have had a real job for any extended time

While the $15/Hour American Worker does NOT have

The latest Swine Flu Incident {Attack} that http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Swine_Flu_Mexico occurred in Mexico is the scenario that is usually suggested . . .

Day Zero : Start with one City {London} that has a very large Asian Population that is Transiting in-&-out via the Airlines Daily.
Start by Infecting All Asians at the Airport.

Day One : From there within a Day 10 to 20 more Cities of Arrival get Infected.

Day Two : From these within another Day 10 to 20 Chinese Cities of Arrival get Infected.

Day Three : PANDEMIC IN CHINA !

This assumes that the Infectees at the Point of Origin City {London} have a three day period of being Asymptomatic {No Signs of Sickness}

Note - The Chinese Plan on Losing 1/3rd of their Population in a Nuclear War {The US Population}
-and- The Chinese Taking a Decades Long View :
See That As Being A Potential 'Good' Outcome.
-so- A Bio-War Attack that does the same thing would be something that they would survive over the decades and overcome; without the problems of all the Nuclear Radiation...

it's a sick world out there . . . ~ RHF

The only other 'gem' I found recently is a Westinghouse 'Seven-Transistor' AM radio, model H-602P7, ca. late 50's, apparently their first transistor radio.

Genuine top grain cowhide case, which is in darn near mint condition, for $3.18 out the door.

Basically, the SSB button is there so you can hear single sideband (SSB) signals such as amateur radio and "utility" stations, as opposed to normal AM mode signals such as MW and SW broadcast stations. You need to patiently use the fine tune function to correctly tune in SSB signals. Although it's possible to receive AM mode signals using the SSB button, your radio may use a narrow filter in SSB mode, which could make AM signals sound muffled due to the narrow bandwidth.

Republicans may sweep overall, but ‘arm of socialist party’ likely to emerge unscathed

While Republicans are expected to sweep in today’s elections, ironically, the most radical Democrat members of Congress – most notably a House caucus originally founded as an arm of a Marxist socialist organization – are expected to emerge mostly unscathed.

Top Democratic Socialists of America members have been closely linked for years to Obama.

You're a hard man, Smith...

Once again, in a perfect world there may be a kernel of truth in what you say, BUT...

Joe Sixpack (and Mrs. Joe) in reality, are too busy trying to keep body and soul together, trying to keep food on the table, trying to keep their jobs or trying to find a new job, thus limiting the time they have for politics. They -should- be more active in politics, but reality has a way of getting in the way. The already happened dumbing down of America doesn't help, either.

This part of the Link should give a 'hint'
"tsunami-test-announcement"

So WWV in the USA in Fort Collins, CO -USA-http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/WWV_%28radio_station%29

Is getting into the business of issuing of Issuing Tsunami Alert Warnings "D'Oh!" from the Center of the Continental USA for the South Pacific Area ???which part of this picture does not seem right???

Why not pay-for/sponsor a Time Standard and Frequency Radio Station in the middle of Australia that can also do the Tsunami Alert

Warnings for the South Pacific ? ? ? They are 'there' in the Area; and most/many local Radio Listeners in the South Pacific Area can receive them much better than WWV coming from the USA.

Better yet why not let Singapore, Indonesia Malaysia and all the 'other' Countries in the South Pacific Area form a Consortium and have their own Time Standard and Frequency Radio Station with a Tsunami Alert Warnings System.

What Two Frequencies to use :
Use 5,555 kHz and 11,111 kHz
-or- 4,321 kHz and 12,345 kHz
-easy-to-remember-mnemonics-

Broadcast Mode just like WWV : DSB-w-RC

SWL "HF" Receive Antenna Splitter
http://www.qrp.pops.net/swl-ant-split.asp

If you SWL Antenna is over 50 Foot long and 100 Feet would be better. You could build your Two Step 'Passive' Antenna Splitter

1ST - A 1:1:1 Splitter out-side the House or at the entry to the House : Three Colored Bundled Wires {all the same length and number of turns}
Wrapped around and through a Ferrite Toroidal Core [Donut] for an Isolation "Splitter" going to the two Radios. One-Coax Connector "In" for Antenna & Ground -and- Two-Coax Connectors "Out" going to the Radios.

2ND - Run the Coax to your Radios and use a 9:1
Matching Transformer between each of the Radios and the Coax Cable feeds.

-or- You can also make your own 9:1 Matching Transformers by using a Two Colored Wires Wrapped around and through a Ferrite Toroidal Core [Donut] with One Wire having 30 Turns and the other Wire having 10 Turns.

We will envy the British. They did not sell out completely to the fascists like we did. I think Eastern Europe is a more apt analogy.

I think the fallout will stay in the Northern Hemisphere, where it will kill more crazy white people than anyone else. There is not enough

That's genocidal.

Since it's just White people you're talking about "rounding up" and sterilizing, though, I suspect that you will not make it onto the "hate group" lists maintained by Jewish organizations like the SPLC and ADL.

In the inverted morality that the billionaire media elite have imposed on us, it is perfectly okay, even praiseworthy, to hate White people.

It surprises me it took so long! Perhaps this time we can get it right. But, frankly, after I have seen how long and how much people can tolerate insanity and insane plans, this might just be a pleasure, compared to what is yet to come ... but, we do agree on this one, we are getting EXACTLY what we deserve.

Coby CX-39 World Band AM / FM / Shortwave Radio with Digital Display
http://www.cobyusa.com/?p=prod&prod_num_id=154&pcat_id=1008#features-tab

This seems to be a digital remake of the old analog Panasonic RF-2400 AM & FM Radio -wrt- same shape, general size and handle.
http://t3.gstatic.com/images?q=tbn:ANd9GcSVbBjNJvL6LsnhaFikIOwJuWM6Hl...

So I bought one for US$13+FS and the conclusion is DON'T WASTE YOUR MONEY ~ RHF

The Volume Control Know has bumps in it as you rotate it.

The Frequency Display is Off by several kHz.

The Frequency Display is only 4-Digits which is OK for AM/MW and FM -but- IFfy for SW

Has "AM" & "FM" Icons in the LCD Display
-but- No "SW" Icon -you-see- "AM" & MHz
* SW above 10 MHz the LCD Display is 12.34 MHz and below 3.21 MHz in 0.01 MHz {10 kHz}
* FM above 99.9 MHz the LCD Display is 102.4 MHz and below 88.3 MHz in 0.1 MHz * AM/MW above 1000 kHz the LCD Display is 1234 kHz and below 753 kHz in 1 kHz units

Shortwave has WWV at 10 MHz and 9.4 MHz plus several Valley AM/MW Radio Stations that are over 50 Miles away can be heard on SW.

AM/MW and SW Filter is way to wide
-oops- may not be any . . .

Sound is OK -but- The Coby's 3" Speaker is smaller than Panasonic's 4" Speaker.

Band Switch has to be 'force' {Sticks} to switch bands.

One nice thing is that it uses 2 "D" Batteries and should run forever on them. {Hopefully}

Same basic 'Case' as the Panasonic RF-2400 -but-There are no Panasonic quality electronics inside.

HELLO 'Coby' Try Building "Quality" Into Your Radios.

THAT has to qualify as the stupidest statement of the year.
Dingy Harry and Nasty Pelosi in back room deals, Nasty Pelosi, who's husband owns $17 million in Star-Kist Tuna, gets a special deal. When the minimum wage was increased from $5.15 to $7.25, Pelosi had American-Samoa exempt from paying the higher wage and added an earmark to the bail out bill that would give $33 million to "economic development in American-Samoa, all this to increase her husbands holding in Star-Kist stock. Charlie Rangel and his ethics scandal, Dingy Harry and his 1.1 million dollar deal on property he didn't even own, Louisiana Congressman William Jefferson with his cold cash in the freezer, Treasury Secretary Tim Geithner and his tax evasion, just to name a few. If you look at the numbers you'll see that Dems outspent Repubs but still lost the House.

Anyway, if politicians weren't worth buying there wouldn't be spending.

New York Times
Democrats Outspend G.O.P. in TV Ads in House Races
By MICHAEL LUO
Published: November 1, 2010

Despite a deluge of campaign spending over the last few months by Republican-leaning outside groups, Democratic candidates and their allies have outspent Republicans over all on television advertising in House races, according to data provided by Kantar Media’s Campaign Media Analysis Group, which tracks political advertising. In Senate races, however, Republicans outspent Democrats.
Matthew Staver for The New York Times

The most recent numbers available, through Friday, showed that Democratic candidates and their allies spent $142 million on television advertising across all House races in the general election, compared with $119 million by Republican candidates and their backers.

And they still lost. LOL!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

The bright side is there was a lot of money spent by republicans that lost such as Meg Whitman (ebay) and Carly Fiorena. This is money that went into the economy to help keep it going. Spending by those that have it is what is needed in the economy since they obviously don't want the govt to do it.

By putting it by my great chair I will use it more. I use the frist 10

It's very hard to use presets for SW because of the times sets. It's easyer

This link does not reference the 527 groups where repugs spending 10-1 in some states. Kind-a wish you could hide that turd now. Teabaggers, start learning Mandarin

By the way, you as a teabagger, don't think you childish usenet groups trick is going unnoticed. If you really had a point to argue, you would be man enough to not act like a little school child. Unfortunately, small brained little weasels like you are what destroys any attempt at legitimate political reform with deceit and low-handedness. You are a true coward and an embarrassment for any american. You are why anything attempting what the teabag party says they are attempting will always fail.

Enjoy the rest of your day surfing the binaries

Moreover, the NASWA countries list is for all nations existing since the end of WWII; so that official SWL list will contain numerous nations beyond those in existence at any one time.

I hate to break this to you, but no matter how young any person on earth happens to be at this point, he wouldn't live long enough to be "doomed" by climate change, even if he were to live to be 200. Or, perhaps, even if he could outlive the longevity of Methuselah.

So there's NO reason to sweat "climate change."

You may just be having difficulty adjusting to the very fine tuning you need to use. I'm not familiar with your receiver but assuming it uses a little thumbwheel, you have to just barely move the wheel to get it exactly right.

It'll help if you practice on an easy signal that you are already familiar with. Tune to an AM (MW) powerhouse that comes in real well.
Now switch to SSB and tune it in that way. Practicing this way should give you an idea of "what it sounds like" when you're close, and which way to turn the wheel to get closer. It'll also give you a good idea of just how exact your tuning needs to be on that receiver and thumbwheel.

And do bear in mind that it isn't likely to ever "sound good", as you put it. Clear and bearable is about all you should expect.

(I realize this advice presumed a number of things about your radio.
If it seems like crazy talk, just ignore it.)

A friend of mine is moving and he's moving into a tiny apartment in NYC, so he's been getting rid of his stuff. I helped him pack stuff up and him knowing I was into radios gave me his "Grundig 750" I say that's pretty sweet for a few hours of work. :P

I figure I can make this a desktop set and retire my E5 of desktop work, and use it for travel. I want to make a better desktop setup than just the radio + its whip antenna. I noticed this radio has BNC connectors, the Kaito SW antenna that I have for my E5 just uses a 3.5mm standard jack. What kind of antenna does this radio use? (I didn't get a box or manual with it) It says 50ohm near the bnc connectors.

The history of the world is tyrrany. The concept of a benevolent government is, in the scale of the world's total history, a comparatively new, and, often still, experimental concept, often rejected in the fullness of time by the populations which try it.

The nature of humankind is such that governments need to be limited in size, and scope, in order to keep the autocratic elements, which will lead to things like fascism, in check. But such limited governments rarely maintain even the veneer of their original benevolence beyond a third generation.

Even in this country, we not only take freedom for granted, but we actually hold it in a kind of thinly disguised contempt, as the ever heightening strangulation of incremental governnmental regulations bears witness. The ongoing attempts to codify PC proscriptions in language, for instance, specifically attempts to reign in the free range of speech in private conversations. The creation of, and now legal mandates for, extra-governmental organizations the purpose of which is to tell us how to live in our homse.

The tightening web of often contradictory laws that require legal education to navigate without jeopardy is no accident. And it is borne of a fundamental need of humans to control, or inhibit individual behaviours at will, for no higher purpose than to see things done our own way. An on-topic reference is the absurd, and growing, anti radio craft movement in this country. The attempts to ban the use of scanning radios...the attempt, in the 90's, to pass lawa banning the use of general coverage shortwave receivers by the general public...the passing of legislation mandating that privacy protection encryption algorithms, like the ones used in PGP, have backdoor governmental access at will...all speak to the open hostility that we have in this country to free expression of our individual choices in activity, in speech, or in lifestyle.

But this is not new. It is the history of Man on this earth.

It is the reason for the need of eternal vigilance, and the need for each of us to stand up, not only to vigorously object to the intrusion, but to resist, and to fight the thickening layers of government stricture narrowing individual freedoms of Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness.

Actually, no. Using the NASWA Country List, one might have heard Radio Prague back in the 60's and counted that as a QSL from Czechoslovakia.

Now, since the country has split in two, one might have heard Radio Prague back in the 60's from a transmitter in what is now the Czech Republic which counts as one country, and heard Radio Prague from a transmitter in what is now Slovakia which counts as one country.

Or, one might hear whatever broadcast service today, emanating from each transmitter location (location, location, location!), and count them as two separate countries, not three, using the NASWA Country List, i.e., there is no separate listing for Czechoslovakia, only listings for the Czech Republic and Slovakia.

See: http://naswa.net/list/ where the List can be downloaded at the bottom of the page.

The Goodwill store I go to is about half a mile South of doggy's couch.They have an electronic weigh scales sitting on the checkout counter top the cash register.Some things the customer is buying get weighed, other things that are too large or bulky don't get weighed.They never ask me if I am a seinor citizen, although it is ovious I am.

Only guessing, I figure that Select A Tenna would be priced at about $1.50 to $2.00 if it was for sale at the Goodwill store I go to.Perhaps as low as seventy five cents.

Thanks for the clarification. It's clear, despite 40 years immersed in SW listening, that I've not pursued QSL's (Veries, for those in Glendale) to any serious extent. And never with the NASWA listt. I've got a handful, here. And those are filed away with my receiver docs.

You may use nearly any antenna you choose. With varying results, of course. The simplest, and often most effective, is a simple random wire, transformed at 9:1 to a 50 ohm coaxial transmission line to your radio. Mount the antenna away from noise sources, and ground the primary to an earth ground at the remote end. And the shield of the coax at the receiver end.

You can slap one of these antennas together in a couple of hours, and it will last for decades.

Other common types of antennae include dipoles, verticals, inverted V's, slopers.

And there are others, less common, with excellent performance characteristics for SW listening.

The important things to consider are proper grounding, for both the protection of your radio, and noise avoidance, and location away from noise sources for low signal performance.

But above all, experiment. Try things. See what works for your location and your installation.

Half the fun is in the discovery.

MrRas,

For a Simple to Do/Use Shortwave Antenna :

NOTE - The GS750 has a very good built-in AM/MW Ferrite Rod Antenna that lets you Rotate it and does a good job for most AM/MW Radio Receiving.

First try a simple indoor Antenna for SW Radio by using the two 500 Ohm side Terminals http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/portable/0750rs.jpg
Make sure that you have the Antenna///Ext Ant Switch on the Right-Side of the Radio set to :
"Ext Ant"

Buy an FM Folded-Dipole Antenna
http://images.jr.com/productimages/IST202590.PNG?WID=150&CVT=JPEG

Stretch-out the FM Dipole Antenna on the Wall {or Across-a-Window} like this.
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/mwant/0143.html

Put one end-lead of the Antenna into the Red "SW ANT" Terminal and the other end-lead of the Antenna into the Black "GRN" Terminal.
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/portable/0750ant.jpg

Gives you a 20+ Foot simple loop of wire antenna that has some noise canceling properties and should give you better Shortwave Reception then the GS750 Radio's built-in Whip Antenna.

That's a pretty accurate answer, but I'll give you one that's a lot easier and close enough.

For the coax use RG-6 (there are lots of versions of it). It's 75ohm TV cable, which makes it very common and cheap. The difference between 50ohms, the supposed input impedance of the radio and 75ohms will make no difference for reception.

You can buy lengths of it with F connectors on it, and F connector to whatever you need adaptors. In the US, Loews and Home Depot have the the cable by the foot, and connectors.

Make sure to ask for COMPRESSION (not crimp) connectors and that they fit the cable you buy. You can also by them from satellite TV shops and eBay.

While you are at it, buy a GROUNDING BLOCK, and use it to connect the cable to a grounding wire where it enters your home.

The 9:1 transformer is pretty much optional. Sometimes it reduces noise and makes the signals easier to hear. Sometimes it does nothing. If you want, try it without it and see if it works for you. If it does not, buy or build one. Note that in order to work right it needs a ground rod at the transformer (which is different than a grounding rod or connection).

Geoff.

Tuesday's elections constituted the most stunning rebuke to an incumbent president in 72 years. Republicans campaigning against the Obama agenda gained at least 60 House seats, at least six Senate seats, nine governorships and a large number of state legislative chambers.
Exit polls showed a desire for smaller government and repealing Obamacare.

Restoring transparency
Ed Lasky
Barack Obama promised transparency:
that bills would be posted for review by Americans; that negotiations over the health care bill would be broadcast on CSPAN. Politics would be changed forever and the old ways of Washington would be over.

Well, as we all know by now those promises were all thrown under the bus. The Obama team has hidden much of that they have been up to over the last two years. They have been criticized from right and left; they could ignore criticism as long as Democratic allies held sway in Congress.
But their allies are about to head home (or to K Street) and we might finally be on the verge of Republicans being able to provide the transparency candidate Obama promised.

From the non-partisan The Hill:

The Obama administration's transparency and accounting methods have been publicly lambasted on a range of issues over the last couple of months.

In a report issued last month, Neil Barofsky, the special inspector general for the Troubled Asset Relief Program (TARP), suggested the administration was playing accounting games to make it look like the government was regaining more money from TARP than it actually was...

Meanwhile, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) quietly approved 30 waivers to companies that were considering dropping their healthcare coverage. The waivers enabled them to dodge a key mandate in the healthcare law President Obama signed earlier this year.

The decision, which was buried on HHS's website and not announced in a press release, was excoriated by both liberals and conservatives.

In September, White House Health Reform Director Nancy-Ann DeParle stated on the White House blog that the new healthcare l aw "will make healthcare more affordable f or Americans."

But Richard Foster, Medicare's nonpartisan chief actuary, disputed that assertion. At the time, he said, "The amounts quoted in the White House blog are not meaningful..."

The administration has also stonewalled Congressional and media efforts regarding the New Black Panther Party voter intimidation case and the role of officials at the Department of Justice in deep-sixing this case. Allegations of a cover-up by have been made. Representative Frank Wolf has been focused on this issue. The bad news for the Obama team? When he was in a minority he was only able to bring a bit of pressure on the Department of Justice. In the majority, he will become chairman of the committee that oversees the budget of the Department of Justice. I think he will have a bit more leverage to pry open the department and get the facts released.
sz
Congressman Lamar Smith, ranking member of the House Judiciary Committee and a critic of the Department of Justice, will also have a field day as he pushes for more disclosure regarding the Department's approach towards the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now (the infamous ACORN)

as well as the New Black Panther Party case.

There is a lot of cleaning up to do after the damage that Obama and his team have wrought. Also, there will be disclosures of waste and fraud in the giant stimulus program.
Will there also be revelations of patronage and political favoritism courtesy of our taxpayer dollars?

Supreme Court Justice Louis Brandeis wrote that "sunlight is the best disinfectant."

Let the sunshine in.

Yes don't use of water pipes (plastic or even very old models) or even gass pipes can be dangerus to the can get static and be a danger when you grap the metal at you radio

The best thing to do is get a large coper pipe 6 m or longer in to the ground
and just use that only , and not the earth pin at the AC socked of the power line it can give noise and and static

Maybe her old man slugged her ''one'' and she was nursing a bruise.

I needs to go to the Lowe's store for a torch thingy that screws on to hand held small propane gas tanks, my old one leaks.All those paint splatters on my concrete front porch.Propane torch and a wire brush works good.Of course I will stop off first at the Goodwill store ergo the Goodwill store is right on the way to the Lowe's store.I needs some better shoes too, I will see what Goodwill has.

When they Dug the Trench for the new Plastic Pipes you should have put 10~25 Feet of #10 Bare Copper Wire in it : To use as a Grounding Point.

Better use Short RadioShack 4-Ft Copper Clad Ground
Rod with 10a #10 Bare Copper Wire Soldered to it

Single Rod & Wire : O------------------

Single Rod with Doubled Wire {better 2x)

Ten Foot piece of Copper Pipe with an 8 Foot piece of Iron ReBar in the center

B============================

Place the ReBar fully in one end of the Copper Pipe and Crimp* that end shut.
* Beat flat with a Hammer.
Bend the Copper Pipe at a point that is away from the Crimped end; where the ReBar ends so it forms an "L" and then Crimp* the other end shut too.
Place the Cooper Pipe in the open Trench.

FOR ALL OF THE ABOVE : Before you put the Bare Copper Wire or the Copper Pipe in the Open Trench sprinkle 1/2 a Bag of Cat Litter {Bentonite} along the bottom of the Trench where the Wire/Pipe will lay; plus sprinkle 1/2 a Pound of Salt too. Lay the Wire/Pipe into the bottom of the Trench. Then sprinkle the remaining Cat Litter and Salt over the Wire/Pipe. -oops- Don't Forget to Fill-in the Open Trench.

Not the only thing you can do -but- When face with Plastic Pipe and an Open Trench :
It's Doable ! {Easy & Cheap & Cost Effective}

- Use a drilling hammer to drive an 8' steel rod
- into damp earth.
- It is very therapeutic.

of Copper Clad 8-Ft Steel Ground Rods . . .

HELL NO! I need to get rid of this bunch of criminal-treasonous-b*st*rds who have stolen my public servants offices and get someone in there who can take orders from the people!

But we do have to govern this country. Unfortunately, that is the responsibility put on us by the forefathers and the Constitution!
Indeed, only the people, honest American citizens, have the just right to govern the USA.

ARTHRNY,

Look at the Recurring Frequency : 5898 kHz and General Times in these Posts :
08:34 UTC
08:15 UTC
08:37 UTC
08:27 UTC
08:20 UTC
08:23 UTC
All ending around 08:40~08:42 UTC with Three (3) "Good-Night"s

So start listening on 5898 kHz around 08:15~08:40 UTC for the "La Chica"
Spanish Numbers Station and around 08:40~08:42 UTC you should get your Three (3) "Good-Night"s

Also you might try listening for the "La Chica" Spanish Numbers Station 5880 kHz around 07:15~07:45 UTC.

NOTE - It Is Now 07:10 UTC ...so...
===J=U=S=T===L=I=S=T=E=N===

and to all... a 'goodnight' ~ RHF

16 ounces x 50,000 pounds = 800,000 ounces (unless you're talking metric tons (1000 Kg/2200 lbs.), in which case it would be 16 x 55,000 = 880,000

Yeah depends on your individual level of pain and medical need is . . .

Some Smoke a Join or two a day...
-for- Consistent/Recurring Chronic Pain

While others combine small Hits/Tokes of MJ {Smoking Pot} with Sipping on a Cup or two of MJ Tea all day long . . .
-for- Cancer & Chemotherapy

- - How many ounces are in the 25 tons
- - (which were found the other day in
- - the secret tunnel)?

- 16 ounces x 50,000 pounds = 800,000 ounces

At 20 Dime Bags* to an Ounce {Ziplock} 'Baggy' That's US$200 per Ounce
* US$10 Price

-or- 800,000 Oz x US$200 = US$160,000,000 Street Value

The Price Decrease Numbers for Marijuana in the State of California -if- Prop 19 had passed was a 75%~80% reduction in the Street Price of Marijuana within a Year.

With 'Home-Grown' being 2/3rds of the Market and Commercial POT 'Clinics' down to 1/3rd of the Market.

So the potential Tax Revenue based on Sales was just Smoke-and-Mirrors; with any real Revenue coming from Individual Use Licenses and Grow Permits*.

* OK for the State of California -but- A Documented Public Record of the Licensee being a Federal Illegal Drug User/Abuser.

Hello all,

I'm considering buying this radio, but first wanted to have some feedback from people having it.

So far I've seen small reports on UltraLightDX Yahoo group, or feedback such as the following : http://tinyurl.com/3xftdh8
But I've also read some reports saying it is not that good...

I'm currently using a Sangean 909 at home and a Sony SW100 while traveling, combined with external speakers. This means having different wall marts, two sets of batteries (2 AA for the Sony, 6 AAA for the speakers), so having only one set with radio + stereo speakers, chargeable from via USB port, seams a great option.

My concern is :
- does connecting this radio via USB for charging, or via AUX IN to enhance the PC sound, import some RFI into the sound ?
- is the sound of the radio good enough ? No "metallic" sound lile with some cheap Chinese made PC speakers ?
- The report I've mentionned earlier says that reception is almost at the level of a Sony 7600GR... If I could have more information/testimony on that subject, it would be great...

Thanks for your input,

Charly

Some random thoughts:

1) I have no experience with this radio. Only with Tecsun products, as a company.

2) Tecsun has a rather questionable reputation for QC in its initial offerings of a product. With time and experience (as differentiated from so-called 'generations' (of which there are none in Tecsun products), the company does improve product quality considerably.

3) Support is virtually non-existent from Tecsun. Warranty issues are handled by their marketing partners, so if you buy this radio from an e-Bay vendor, you're purchase is final, and you don't have redress if there is a failure.

4) You have a working radio of some reputation. If performance and use is your only need, as opposed to 'new-radio-itis' from which many of us regularly suffer, keep your 909, and enjoy it.

From what I've read of this model, it's an interesting set of features. Not having to carry power components is attractive while travelling, but USB connectivity usually means a lot of wideband noise radiated by the computer the radio is connected to. Especially a notebook. And I like the idea of a stereo speaker set. But speakers in portables generally blow, as a rule. Even some of the Sony portables have dreadful speakers. So, don't expect too much, there.

If past performance of other USB connectivity is any indication, the likelihood of digital noise being imported into the radio though a USB connection is also pretty high. And having that connection to the radio during MW listening...well, good luck. My experience with USB connections and MW has been very poor.

Overall input: Wait until this model is ready for prime-time, and then find it from a retailer who can offer you support.

I have a Sangean 505 SW radio and the built-in antenna is below expectation. I would like to make an external antenna for it, but the problem is that the radio has a standard 3.5mm jack plug and i don't know how to connect the wire to this jack.

any suggestions?
thanks

If you're just using a random wire, connect the wire to the tip connection, and a ground to the shield tang.

If you're using an external with a coaxial transmission line, connect the center conductor to the tip connection, and the shield to the shield tang.

If you're using a pre packaged active like the Sony, just plug it in.

If you're using an active like a McKay Dymek, or similar, use an RCA to 3.5mm adaptor and plug it in.

Once you've got it working the way you want, or at all, then experiment with other configurations.

I was looking at the label on my plastic bottle of Titebond II wood glue.It says Ideal for Radio Frequency (R-F) wood gluing systems.

What does Titebond wood glue company mean by that? I suppose if you are building a wood frame for an antenna or a radio, you should use Titebond glue if you are gluing something?

That's a good question. Prices vary according to condition, of course, but DXing.com suggests a going price between $600 and $650.

Ebay reports completed sales between $475, and $600.

Personally, I've seen them go as low as $325, and as high as a kilobuck at shows. The A and B iterations, considerably higher.

It really depends on what a buyer is willing to pay.

I would never use the word "cheat" for people who are merely trying to keep their wealth out of the hands of malicious, vicious criminals and the rabble they exploit.

But you are right; the thrift store alternative has a lot going for it.

Shopping there means fewer tax dollars for the parasites in Washington and their vile clients. And shopping there also means fewer, far fewer, dollars for the multinational corporations and the banks (who are even viler than the underclass, if you can imagine that such a thing is possible).

And one can get almost anything one needs at a thrift store, at one tenth or less than the usury boys want you to spend. All you need is patience and the willingness to spend some time doing the thrift store circuit in your town twice a week or, better yet, once a day.

It's entertaining as well. The folly of humankind is displayed when you see last year's $199.95 "hot item" or $29.95 movie-themed gewgaw in the 25 cent bin. And a lot of cute women can be found there too, both behind the cash register and roaming the aisles.

I'll see you at the Goodwill,

Kevin.

I reckon a Drake R8 (whether it works or not) would be priced at only a few dollars if such a radio happens to show up at the Goodwill store about half a mile (actually seven tenths of a mile, according to the odometer on my 1983 big ass long tall full size Dodge van) South of doggy's couch.Five dollars, Ms.Edna (at that Goodwill store I go to) would most likely say.
Ms.Edna always treats me right.There are a couple more Goodwill stores around town, I think, I could look in my phone book and see, but I am not going to be driving all around town, I don'ts like to drive anymore anyway.

That R-F gluing is kind of wayyyyy over my head bone.What I use wood glue for is regular old fashioned wood gluieing.I have a hot melt glue gun I bought at Lowe's less than a year ago.I haven't used it yet, I don't even remember why I bought it.

Actually, Gary DeBock discovered that, at least for some Tecsun products, there are generations and that significant design changes can occur within the same model. A good example was the analog R-9012 which has been compared to the excellent-performing 911 but with a tuning knob instead of a wheel. The problem is, ULDX folks started buying them in droves and many turned out to be duds. The answer was that the good performance came from a redesigned 2nd production run. With many recent Tecsun models that information is hidden in small print on the inside of the carton's end flap. When there is a difference, some of the more reliable eBay sellers (like tqchina or anon-co) will honor requests for a specific variant before shipping an order.

My big wooden cabinet Telefunken Opus 7 AM/FM/Shortwave table model radio, I paid four dollars for that radio at Goodwill a bunch of years ago.I think it dates back to the 1960's.It is in very good cosmetic and physical condition.It is a beautiful radio.

About the same time, at Goodwill I bought a Grundig wooden cabinet floor model AM/FM/Shortwave radio with a Phonograph built into the top of the radio.It is in fair to good contition physically and cosmetically.I think it is a Majestic model, probally dates back to 1957.I paid fourteen dollars for that radio at Goodwill.Both radios work ok.

Richard Rahn
Rahn on Econ101

The U.S. Department of Education was created with the primary stated goal of increasing students' test scores, but test scores for 17-year-old American students have remained essentially flat since 1970. The department's budget has grown to a whopping $107 billion this year. Per pupil, taxpayer-financed education spending (adjusted for inflation) has risen by more than 200 percent since 1970 (and 150-plus percent since 1980). Clearly and unambiguously, the department deserves a grade of F.

The employees and bureaucrats at Education have been rewarded for failure each year by ever-increasing budgets, which give them more control of state education departments and local school boards. If you reward failure, you tend to get more of it, and if you reward success, you tend to get more successes. Thus, it is no surprise that test scores have not improved.

Suppose Congress said to the department, "We are going to cut your budget and payroll by 20 percent per year until test scores start improving, and if they have not substantially improved within five years, the department will be dust." What do you think would happen to test scores?

Maybe I am mistaken, perhaps it is Salvation Army which doesn't have to charge customers sales tax--I really forget ... However, I plan on buying much more from the used stores, and especially those with tax exempt status, in the future.

2782. Keith Olbermann donated $2,400 to co-chair of ‘Marxist-socialist’ block

Olbermann made a $2,400 donation to U.S. Rep. Raul Grijalva, Democrat-Ariz.;

http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Raul_Grijalva
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=1316

Grijalva is co-chair of the Congressional Progressive Caucus which is lead by Über-Liberal Marxist Rep. Dennis Kucinich

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6497
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Congressional_Progressive_Caucus

The caucus was founded by and is heavily tied to the Democratic Socialists of America, or DSA.

http://www.wnd.com/index.php?fa=PAGE.view&pageId=191605
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6428
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Democratic_Socialists_of_America

Demonstrating the close relationship between the DSA and the Progressive Caucus, two weeks ago WND reported the Democratic chairman of the powerful House Judiciary Committee was caught on tape meeting with DSA leaders to discuss how the group can cooperate to strengthen President Obama and advance their “one-world” plans.

http://www.wnd.com/index.php?pageId=216593

Until November 2002, the website of the Progressive Caucus was hosted by the DSA. Following news reports that drew attention to the congressional website being hosted by the socialist organization, the list of CPC names was moved to the website of Sen. Bernard Sanders, I-Vt., an avowed socialist, and eventually to its own site.

Of course it's not. Williams was one of your own, therefore it was wrong to fire him. Olbermann was not, so it is.

All that remains in the exercise is to come up with some other random distinction and claim that was the real reason.

The department was actually created to funnel money to the education industrial complex. Government solves nothing. It simply rewards favored interest groups. The Dept. of Agriculture sends tax money to agriculture interests. HUD gives it to construction interests and so on.

Ignorant-R-Us :
The US Department of Education and the "Educational Process Complex"

Werner - ? education industrial complex ?

The word 'industrial' is very wrong here.

You are trying to 'equate' the "Dept of Education" to the "Dept of Defense" as having a large supportive Industrial Base supporting the Educational Process.
BUT IT DOES NOT.

The better and more correct term would be "Educational 'Process' Complex" sort of like a Meat 'Processing' Plant moving the Product Through and Getting the Product Out On-Schedule.

What Makes it a 'Complex' is the Layers in the "Educational Process" : Pre-School -to- Primary School -to- Secondary School -to- College and University; plus the massive school infrastructure; {industry} and educational materials system.

The Raw Material {Children} for the "Educational Process" is Supplied by the Parents : Who are then Taxed to Support It. Couldn't quite label the Parents as 'Industrial'; and the Parents Do Not Profit and Get-Rich by the "Educational Process Complex"; the Parents are Taxed and Made Poorer by having to support it.

The "Educational Process Complex" is in-fact very much like a Meat Processing Plant : Good Meat In =equals= Good Meat Out -but- Regardless of the Quality of the Meat : The Meat Is Processed On-Time and Shipped Out On-Time. Steaks, Hamburgers and Hot Dogs all coming out at the same time.

A Very Basic Rule-of-Nature : Various Inputs Will Naturally Result In Various Outputs [.]

=WRT= The "Educational Process Complex" : No Two Children Going-In Are The Same =&= No Two Children Coming-Out Are The Same -hopefully- Each Is Changed To Be The Best That They Can Be : Within Their Educational Processing Time.

IT IS A FALSE EXPECTATION : To Think that the "Educational Process Complex" would yield Uniform Results : Steaks {Doctors} Only Hamburgers {Mechanics} Only
Hot Dogs {Sports} Only
Instead the "Educational Process Complex" results in a diverse mixture of all.

Fund All Aspects of the "Educational Process Complex" to Produce the Diverse Mixture of Educated Citizens Needed by a Complex Society.

Educate For The Need/Needs* : Not To The Abstract.
* The Need and Ability of the Individual
-and- The Needs and Requirement of Society.

College is the Right Answer for 15%~22% of those who are going through the "Educational Process" : While Something Else is What the 'Other' 78%~85% Need and Deserve from the "Educational Process" : DON'T CONTINUE TO SHORT CHANGE THEM {THE MAJORITY} TO SERVE THE NEEDS OF THE MINORITY [.]

Too Much Educational Spending 67% is Being Done to Educate the 15% -while- Too Little Educational Spending 33% is Being Done to Educate the 85% That's around 11~12 to 1 and morally un-just and socially un-fair to the 85% Majority coming out of the "Educational Process Complex" and their Parents who are Paying for Educational Enrichment of Others while Short Changing the Education Needs of their very own Children.

equal education funding for all : from the highest to the lowest : to meet the needs of a just and fair educated society : for all ~ RHF©

Liberty Net: October 30, 2010

http://3950.net/2010/11/liberty-net-october-30-2010/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE DEBATE on this weekï¿½s Liberty Net was far more exciting than any sports contest or drama you could see on television, and the novel ideas exploded from all directions and illuminated the ionosphere ï¿½ and our minds ï¿½ in three dimensions. There was a small amount of rather pathetic jamming, and it looks like some of the noise the net encountered was from a Digital Radio Mondiale (DRM) broadcast transmission from Europe. Net communications werenï¿½t impaired for long, however. (It would be an improvement if European broadcasters went to 90 meters and left 75 meters to amateurs.)

Hereï¿½s a minuscule sample of what you can hear on this weekï¿½s recording:

ï¿½ A wise man once said ï¿½When Congress is adjourned, the nation is safe.ï¿½ (40 minutes)

ï¿½ If thereï¿½s a worldwide economic slump, why is German unemployment at a 30-year low? And Switzerland is doing even better. Could it be the higher genetic quality of those populations? (45 minutes)

ï¿½ The only way to solve our economic problems ï¿½ and avoid tyranny ï¿½ is to make it totally impossible, totally and permanently illegal, for politicians to buy votes by giving money to corporations or to the underclass. (48 minutes)

ï¿½ In Texas, a Black football player raped a high school cheerleader ï¿½ and then the school district sued the _cheerleader_ because they claimed she ï¿½harmed the schoolï¿½ by failing to cheer for her attacker. Then an appeals court ruled _against_ the cheerleader. (50 minutes)

ï¿½ Part 1 of the economic collapse was the real estate derivative implosion of 2008 ï¿½ and part 2 will be the foreclosure implosion of 2011, as $6 trillion in lost value is predicted. (1 hour 7 minutes)

ï¿½ The criminals in Washington are instituting a 55% estate tax on homes, which will effectively force heirs into ï¿½death salesï¿½ and prevent families from becoming financially secure from generation to generation. (1 hour 29 minutes)

ï¿½ Christopher Dodd is sponsoring legislation which would set up ï¿½ under the false flag of environmentalism ï¿½ a huge new federal bureaucracy that would take control of local zoning and force people who now live in single-family homes in the suburbs and small towns to move into Soviet-style multiracial apartment blocks in cities. (1 hour 30 minutes)

ï¿½ One Liberty Net participant travelled to Botswana and taught classes for future technicians at that countryï¿½s national shortwave station. (2 hours 16 minutes)

ï¿½ Could the motive behind these many moves to destroy the single-family home be to stop ï¿½White flight,ï¿½ which has stymied so many of the political classï¿½s dictatorial plans? (2 hours 38 minutes)

ï¿½ The Jerusalem Post reports that a prominent Israeli Rabbi has stated that the sole purpose of Gentiles is to serve Jews. (2 hours 42 minutes)

Thanks to N2SAG and N2IRJ and W1WCR, you can listen live ï¿½ and chat live ï¿½ via the Web whenever the Liberty Net is on the air. You can also download the Liberty Net right here at http://3950.net and listen on your PC or personal mp3 player.

There is one on Fremont St. in Stockton, CA. If you need sinks, counters, doors, windows, bathtubs, etc. it is an interesting place to check out. I picked up some ANSI Grade 1 (commercial) entry locks there awhile back.

It is hit or miss on what they have as it is donations to them which they are selling, or serviceable units which has been removed from existing homes/buildings which are being remodeled.

However, the entry locks I picked up were brand new and cheap compared to buying them elsewhere.

KSTE-AM 650 kHz Sacramento, CA [21.4KW] went to reduced NightTime Power [920 Watts] this Saturday 6 Nov 2010 at around 05:50 PM; which is about where it should; as Sun-Set @ 05:56 PM

From 5PM to 6PM you could start hearing KFI-AM 640 kHz Los Angles, CA getting stronger and by 5:50 PM KFI was being received better here than KSTE.

U.S.80 (I call it Highway 80) I think goes from coast to coast.U.S.Army Base (that Base closed down years ago) that was in Oakland,California at the junction area of Highway 80 and one or two other Highways, I was there for four days and nights in January 1964, on my way to Vietnam. I used to run into, more or less, the same a few years back when the wife and I thought it was smart to be invested in rentals. For decades we found just common locks good enough. Then we started finding out the people we had on the inside of our buildings were as bad or worse then the people on the outsides! We started getting BIGGER and BETTER locks with little on no success. Sometimes the people who lived there were so drugged out or just plain crazy, they were busting the locks to get back into their places.

We dumped the problems and have never been happier ... but, we always make sure the best locks are on our homes, storage, business, etc.

JS

Evidently 2 of the 7 'Atomic' {Radio-Set} Clocks in the House re-set at 2AM PDT back to 1AM PST where they had a very good Time Signal; but the others did not re-set and should sometime before dawn. {hopefully}

IIRC - Most 'Atomic' {Radio-Set} Clocks are

Don't get me started. I used to be the head of engineering for a TV chain that ran live Futbol (soccer for those in Holland , MI) and had affiliates in Arizona. Try explaining Arizona's inobservance vis-a-vis the rest of the country to SALES WEASELS, who have puny IQs to begin with. In Summer our AZ stations were on same schedule as Pacific, in Winter we had to use the Centrsal Feed. No matter what, primetime was screwed up. I was trying to get them to buy a 3 hour delay when I left the company. They'd still have to run Futbol live, but the novellas would run at the right time.

The handle on mine was broken in a transport mishap. The pins on the ends that hold it in set positions broke off. Using a small bit and dremel, I bored out their locations and press fit short pieces of aluminum rod of the same diameter as the original pins using urethane glue as a lubricant.

Rounded off the edges on the tops of the aluminum pins with emery cloth.

Better than new.

First, we may never know the true story, but as it has been presented so far, here are a couple of points for your consideration...

The two main complaints against Olbermann were political donations he made and that he hosted the election returns show.

1) Olbermann is an employee, not the boss. His BOSS assigned Olbermann to do the show. So if you are going to blame anybody, blame the boss. Duh!

2) The political donations Olbermann made were private. Let me say that again: P-R-I-V-A-T-E. On the other hand, Williams blabbed out his fear of Muslims in public, in front of a million viewers. It seems like a poor analogy to compare a private issue against something done in front of a million people.

P.S. Olbermann donated a paltry and LEGAL 2400 bucks. If you wish to complain about something, why not try railing against the FOREIGN companies that donated MILLIONS (through the U.S. Chamber of Commerce) to sway the AMERICAN election.

There is a third point, here, worthy of consideration: The donations that were made were during the campaign. The posting of contributions and their donors was also made during the campaign.
And yet the action against Olberman was made three days AFTER the election.

As you say, we may never know the whole or the true story.

Friendly suggestion:

If your computer has a sound card, you -do- have SSTV capability.

Get the MMSSTV program. It is widely available on the web, FREE and it is excellent (many think it is the 'gold standard' of SSTV).

Take the zero dBm (line level) audio output from your receiver and run it to the input of your sound card. (You can use speaker audio too, but you may have to fidget around a bit adjusting the levels). Either way will work just fine.

That's it! Easy to do and it opens a whole new facet to the hobby -- and you can actually -see- what those pesky pirates are up to.

Well, the signal on 15070 has been playing a lot of that atrocious though catchy "Lady Gaga" stuff, and interspersing it with SSTV. So it may have been a relay of Radio Ga-Ga.

But now it seems to be playing "Pirate Radio Weekly" or something like that, with (roughly) "Ragnar Danneskold" and they just stated they had been relaying Radio Cupid from the Netherlands.

Since some of the announcements contain "Happy Halloween," it must be a recording.

The signal is only intermittently stronger than the background noise, so copy is not perfect. Good production values evident; audio fairly good also. Mode is AM.

As ever,

Kevin.

Über-Liberal Marxist Rep. Dennis Kucinich

In 1977 Dennis Kucinich was elected mayor of Cleveland.
Under his stewardship the city fell into financial bankruptcy.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=630

Kucinich has had close ties to Communist Party USA (CPUSA) members since the 1960s.

http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2010/08/dennis-kucinich-and-communists.html
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=7511

According to the World Socialist Web Site, Kucinich, during his years as mayor of Cleveland, "was closely allied with the Stalinists of the Communist Party USA."

http://www.wsws.org/articles/2003/oct2003/corr-o13.shtml

During Kucinich's successful 1996 Congressional run, he received the support of Communist Party USA-Ohio chairman Rick Nagin.

http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2010/08/dennis-kucinich-and-communists.html

In a 2004 report, Communist Party USA Political Action Committee chair Joelle Fishman singled out Kucinich for praise.

http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2010/08/dennis-kucinich-and-communists.html

In a July 2007 report to the Communist Party USA's National Committee, Party Chairman Sam Webb urged fellow communists to "have a positive attitude toward the candidacy of Congressman Dennis Kucinich," characterizing the latter as "a leading voice of the broad people’s coalition." "The more he [Kucinich] speaks to audiences of the core forces," said Webb, "the better positioned the movement will be to win in 2008 and to fight the good fight in 2009."

http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2010/08/dennis-kucinich-and-communists.html

In 2008, Kucinich's political campaign received support from Rick Nagin and the longtime Communist Party USA official (and Venceremos Brigade veteran) Bruce Bostick.

I'm obsessed with clocks. It would take a week to set them all manually and they'd all drift after a few days and need setting again (except for the ones that use the 60 Hz mains for timebase, like my 50 year old GE Telechron radio station clock).

I don't appreciate the disgusting language and insults of innocent people, David.

West Virginia is very interesting demographically, but I'd prefer to discuss it with someone who doesn't write in such a degrading and ugly way.

For those others who wish to start looking into the matter, this might help:

http://www-958.ibm.com/software/data/cognos/manyeyes/visualizations/iq-by-state-us-2

The IQ of West Virginians, even with whatever excessive inbreeding might exist, is measurably higher than that of Californians.

With all good wishes,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

Well, there are a few semi-political pirates out there. There is WBNY with "Commander Bunny" and Radio Free Speech with "Bill O'Rights".
WBNY still makes regular broadcasts atound 6900 kHz but I don't think Radio Free Speech has been on lately.

You would have liked Dr. T. He called his station Radio Metallica Worldwide. His favorite person to go on a tirade against was Janet Reno. Supposedly he had a 10KW transmitter.

When conditions improve there will be more pirates audible. There are still quite a few on. See:

Bad analogy...you should not PUBLICLY (on your TV show), tout stocks that you own. As to Olbermann PRIVATELY donating, that is fine, because... Olbermann is widely known as, and freely admits to, being liberal. Thus, it should not be a big surprise to anyone that he may have donated to the liberals. Plus he did NOT go on TV and specifically say "I want you to donate to Joe Liberal", an entirely different set of circumstance compared to specifically saying on TV "You should buy 'XYZ' stock" that the touter owns. Sorry, your analogy...isn't.

> Don't people go to jail for that?

Jail for touting stock that they own? Yes, they should go to jail.

The difference that you are missing is that Olbermann is going to tout the liberals no matter what, whether or not he donated or not, nor is he asking anyone else to donate. This is totally different from your stock guy asking viewers to buy specific stocks he owns.

I had a chihuahua that could turn the TV on and off, and change

A financial manager for wealthy clients will not face charges for a hit-and-run because it could jeopardise his job, it has been revealed.

Martin Joel Erzinger, 52, was set to face felony charges for running over a doctor who he hit from behind in his 2010 Mercedes Benz, and then speeding off.

But now he will simply face two misdemeanour traffic charges from the July 3 incident in Eagle, Colorado

'Mr Erzinger struck me, fled and left me for dead on the highway,' he wrote. 'Neither his financial prominence nor my financial situation should be factors in your prosecution of this case.'

But the prosecutor insisted that the case is, in part, about the money. 'The money has never been a priority for them. It is for us,' he said.

Dr Milo was bicycling eastbound on Highway 6 near Eagle when Erzinger allegedly hit him with the black 2010 Mercedes Benz sedan he was driving.

Erzinger fled the scene and was arrested later, police say. He drove until he reached a Pizza Hut parking lot, where he stopped and called Mercedes auto assistance to report the damage to his vehicle.

It seems like ham radio operators have always had a "thing" about cats. I think it may be because cats were attracted to the warm tube rigs, and would spend a lot of time in the shack curled up by the equipment. And because cats are very independent, they don't require you to step outside the shack very often.

That was actually "Victrola, his master's voice". GE subsidiary RCA glommed onto it when they bought the Victor Talking Book Company. The dog's name is Nipper. He is now owned by the English Marconi Company or Thales or Thomson or someone like that.

Joe-from-Kokomo,

Where was your detailed defense of Juan Williams when NPR Wrongfully Terminated JW for his Off-the-Job work at FOX News -oh-the-silence-

NBC's Indefinite-Suspended of Keith Olbermann
Another Case of Big Corporate Media Liberal-Fascism

You are very right that Keith Olbermann was an Open and Clearly Biased TOUT of Liberals and All Things Liberal at NBC : Reflecting the NBC News Liberal Bias and the NBC Corporate Bias.

Also NBC scripted Keith Olbermann on-screen-role as a Major Liberal-Attack-Dog of Conservatives, Republicans and Tea Party-ites

With Keith Olbermann on NBC : NBC did not have to worry about Fairness or Balance -cause-Keith Olbermann Screamed LIBERAL for NBC News
Keith Olbermann Spewed Hate for Republicans by NBC News
Keith Olbermann Said Every Politically Biased Thing That NBC News Wanted Him To Say
-Live-and-in-Person-

So... what is the real true honest reason that NBC News 'suspended' Keith Olbermann . . .
-cause- No one really believes it was for $2400 in Political Donations that were already a matter of public record was the reason ?what's-the-real-why?

FWIW - I predict that Keith Olbermann will be back On-the-Air at NBC by the end of the Year. ~ RHF
-but- NPR will never undo their hostile act of gross 'injustice' to Juan Williams.

You say "wrongfully", I say rightfully.

When you are a "star" or a "celebrity", you are never "Off-the-Job" when you are addressing a million people on TV, even if it's not on your home network. I am sure he was introduced on Fox as Juan Williams from NPR, not John Q. Public, anonymous man-in-the-street.

I can appreciate Williams' honesty in sharing his fears with us; on the other hand, it was not an appropriate thing to say in front of a million people on any TV network.

Oh, sorry, I forgot. You apparently are a Muslo-phobe who thinks -all- Muslims are terrorists and therefore saw nothing wrong with Williams statement. Hey, maybe you should hate all Christians too, because little Timmy McVeigh, a Christian, was a terrorist. Or do you feel uncomfortable when the shoe is on the other foot?

Joe Biden said the same thing before the 2008 campaign. So what?
Like Williams, his opinion and he's welcome to it. It's not like either of them are alone in this thinking.

Whether or not it's sensitive to say such a thing is one matter.
'Appropriate' however, is another. 'Appropriate' is a word that has no place adjacent to the word 'speech.' That said, it has been the thrust of either side in political matters to silence the voice of the other side since the creation of language. That's not likely to change. Nor is the creative nature of the convoluted excuses used to attempt it in 'just this one case.'

The fact is that both Olberman and, to a more grey extent, Williams, violated the terms of their personal service contracts.

In that context...the matter is settled.

But in the case of Olberman, his 'indefinite' suspension apparently ends today. He'll be back tomorrow.

I've got a radio controlled "Atomic" wall clock. Most of the year it maintains excellent time. Something's fouled up when it comes to the beginning and ends of saving time though. It has a habit of adjusting to the time change then switching back to the now invalid time. I can't rely on it displaying the "correct" hour for a couple of days after the scheduled end or beginning of saving time. After a few days it settles down on the correct setting.

The only theory I have as to the cause of the problem would be the clock receiving control signals from two broadcasters, one of which is late changing the clock they base their signals on. As reception changes with weather changes and time of day/night the clock is apparently not always resetting itself by the same broadcaster.

Those old synchronous motor clocks are amazingly accurate, aren't they? I have a circa 1960 Zenith clock-radio with one, and so long as the power stays on, it stays spot-on.

(And yes, it is regularly used for its intended purpose of making the radio turn on in the morning. Vacuum tube radio sets are the best ones to wake to, because they come on gradually instead of suddenly.)

Yes, if they're sufficiently inclined to do such sorts of things. No sexual orientation has a monopoly on evil.

Are you seriously trying to imply that no heterosexual has ever done anything sexually abusive or exploitative, despite the ample evidence of centuries of rape, prostitution, etc. involving heterosexual sex and sexual desire?

Every time I think I've found the nuttiest nutcase yet on the 'net, I find an even nuttier one.

So it's a slur no matter who said it, Biden or Williams. However, Biden had no 'contract'; Williams did.

So essentially you are saying two wrongs make a right. If a -lot- of people spout Klan hatred, it's OK?

Next, "opinion" is OK, but in Williams case, "opinion" came dangerously close to a racial/religious slur, if not actually crossing the line.

Huh? "Appropriate" has no place adjacent to speech? I would respectfully beg to differ. I really don't think it would be "appropriate" to drop "F-bombs" on a kiddie cartoon show.

I don't understand why you are so rude and hostile.

I was saying in my Liberty Net article that genetic quality can affect economics. You (ignoring your crude obscenities and grossly unfair insults of West Virginians) essentially agreed, except you thought that heavily multiracial California might also have high genetic quality, since the income level was higher than in virtually all-White West Virginia.

And I pointed out that (at least on a statewide basis) IQ scores did not bear out your theory. And they don't.

Therefore there must be other reasons, besides genetic quality, why West Virginians have somewhat lower incomes than Californians. The strong influence of fundamentalism, and the concomitant devaluation of science and reason, in West Virginia might be a factor, in my opinion.

Some West Virginians, though, including some with impressive educational and intellectual standing, simply prefer to live in the beautiful mountains, as far as possible from the stench of our diseased cities. And they are willing to forego higher incomes to do that.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

There are two main ways to look at time:

1. That time is merely a measure of what appear to be regular, predictable events (like the oscillations of a circuit controlled by a quartz crystal) and that only "now" exists -- with the past and future being concepts only.

2. That time is a fourth dimension, essentially like the three dimensions of width and height and depth -- with the exception that relatively stationary objects or beings, like us, are always travelling through time at a nearly fixed rate.

So far as I know, most of the evidence supports the second hypothesis.

With my best,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

Depending on who get to make that determination. The power to label is the power to destroy. Labeling speech is contrary to the concept of free expression. We do not have the right not to be offended. We do have the right to discontinue engagement with someone whose speech offends us. But we do not have the right to curtail it.

Actually, that's YOUR determination. Fortunately, you do not speak for anyone but yourself. You do not get the right to control someone else's speech, behaviour, or thought. No matter what you may think of them.

German unemployment is differernt from the US. After unification some part of former GDR had extremely high unemployment by any standards. Government policies are not like in the US and the official current figures can be very misleading. Just check the latest data.

I think it's because the 750/s2000 is kinda heavy so they tack on the price of shipping into the "cost" of the radio, and call it free shipping. You can find s2000s on ebay for about the same as a 750 but then you have another $75-80+ of shipping to cover.

Moving assembly plants to India is something new. Up until now it was usually reserved for China. India was specializing in customer service for nearly EVERY US based computer and telecom corporation . Now, a Harley that is made in India sounds sacrilegious to me. I believe BHO has skipped going to Bangalore ...The place were many ,many and more yet high-tech American jobs went !

Alex Jones talks about it all the time. He's easily found on shortwave at night. 4840khz WWCR.

I know there's more, but those are the two that come to mind.

Someone is making a Ton of money on this model. The total value of parts inside it are probably worth $50-75 maximum. The cabinet +knobs +antenna can't be more than$15-20. The actual value is probably around $80-100. The rest of the quoted prices is a sheer highway robbery .
And this is a 'flagship' Tecsun model, from what I gather...

- That is because today they are mostly chinese native speakers.

Even before the fall of the USSR most of the 'Official' Communist Party Members were in the Peoples Republic of China [PRC].

But Communist are still everywhere around the World - Just ask some peoples in :

Cuba might say they see 'communists' everywhere . . .

Vietnam might say they see 'communists' everywhere . . .

North Korea might say they see 'communists' everywhere . . .

Russia might say they still see 'communists' . . .

Cambodia might say they still see one too many 'communists' . . .

Venezuela might say they see lots of 'communists' . . .

Nicaragua might say they see lots of 'communists' . . .

Indonesia might say they see lots of 'communists' . . .

Many parts of the former USSR might say they often see lots of 'communists' . . .

And Yes in China most people will say they see 'communists' everywhere . . .

- So essentially you are saying two wrongs make a right.

Joe-from-Kokomo - Assumes Juan Williams Actually Said Something Hateful, Mean Spirited and Wrong.
-which-he-did-not- But Your Are Promoting the Idea that JW "DID" -which-is-a-lie-.-

- If a -lot- of people spout Klan hatred, it's OK?

Joe-from-Kokomo - They you go trying to promote the Idea and Image that Juan Williams was Spouting

Hate and fostering Hatred -far-from-the-truth-
-actually-jfk-it-is-you-who-is-promoting-hate-

- Next, "opinion" is OK, but in Williams case,
- "opinion" came dangerously close to a racial/
- religious slur, if not actually crossing the line.

Joe-from-Kokomo,

You have NO creditability because you are now repeating what the Liberal-Fascist Media has told you was said; and what they want you to 'think' Juan Williams said.
DISTORTED REALITY = Misstating the Facts
DISTORTED TRUTH = Promoting the Half-Truth {Lie}

Joe-from-Kokomo - Go Find the transcript of Juan Williams actual words spoken in answer to a question asked on FOX News.

The Facts-Speak-for-Themselves [.]
Muslims {Garb} Airport {Location} nervous moment feelings {inner personal feeling} Anxiety Fear
-wrt- After 9/11

Juan Williams did not State and Opinion : JW talked about his momentary personal 'feelings' of Nervousness, Anxiety and Fear . . . When confronted with a unique situation of people in Muslim Garb in an Airport post 9/11.

LOUD Outside "BANG/BOOM" NOISE

2nd {Rational Mind Thinking} oh relax...
it's just a car back-firing rest easy...

Joe-from-Kokomo clearly you do not have any

Sony bought Columbia. RCA has been owned by Bertelsman since the '70s. I have a Comark lapel pin with Nipper on it. They made klystrode transmitters. They are now owned by Thales, which I believe is a joint venture of Marconi and Thomson (original partners in GE/RCA). Little dog gets around.

Most of the people in California are descended from Okies, Arkies, and other dust-bowl refugees. I'm amazed that they didn't invent the internet in Ft. Smith.

I seem to recall yet another view. I don't remember the source. I may have thought of it, but it's unlikely I was the first.

Time is nothing but an indication of decay. Physical matter deteriorates into heavier and heavier elements. Living things, who temporarily borrow some of those elements, fall apart. Planetary orbits decay. There is more indication of there being only entropy, not time.

That number doesn't seem possible. How often does the population double?
20+ years? Mind you, there was a HUGE drop in the population when the

I doubt if "most" are, but yes, there were many dust bowl refugees that made their way to California, particularly to the Central Valley.
In fact, that's the genesis of the California agricultural inspection stations one sees on the highways leading into that state. Their original purpose was to turn away such "undesirable" immigrants. For that, the State of California got dragged into the Supreme Court for interfering with the US Constitution and the right of Americans to freely move from state to state.

Perhaps my RC wall clock isn't always picking up the saving time or transition day bit when it synchronizes. I was up late for other reasons, but the clock waited until well after the official time to shift. It was showing standard time Sunday afternoon, but reverted back to saving time at some point Sunday evening. At some point Monday morning it shifted back to standard time again.

There have been some times I would temporarily relocate the clock to a windowsill on the side of the house towards Colorado when it started this fickle behavior, but this year I left it hanging on the interior wall where it normally hangs.

The only issue it has ever had away from the saving/standard time changes was the two second motion of the second hand when it needed new batteries. I'm thinking the declining voltage affected the radio receiver to the point it missed too many synchronization attempts.

I've noticed my wireless outdoor thermometer starts missing remote sensor signals before the display starts fading from declining battery voltage. I'm surprised the receiver goes through batteries so much faster than the remote sensors. Must be the power drain for the display. Unfortunately the time display on the thermometer isn't radio controlled and when I attempted to change the time on it one of the necessary buttons refused to work.

That attractive gal/woman? Yep, but she is either married or that dude over there is shacking up with herself.She has two kids, one of them is about seven years old, the other one is about a year old, I think.

I am making three window awnings for those three windows on the back of my house.Those three windows have never had any awnings before.I cut a panel of Ondura in three equal pieces.Soon as I get through with painting the wood frames I made, I am going to mount all of that stuff over those three windows.

From Wikipedia:

"In 2004, BMG and Sony merged their music holdings into a joint venture called Sony BMG. Because Sony Music was the successor to the old CBS record division, this merger meant that RCA Records, once owned by parent RCA, was now under the same umbrella as the label once owned by RCA's rival, the Columbia Broadcasting System (CBS), Columbia Records.

In 2006, Sony BMG merged its Broadway music labels, including RCA Victor to the new Masterworks Broadway Records.

In 2008, Sony acquired Bertelsmann's interest in the record company which was officially renamed Sony Music Entertainment at the start of 2009. RCA became part of the newly formed RCA/Jive Label Group (also known as RCA Records Group) as a result."

Why would compensated unemployment mean bread lines? The bread lines form when unemployment is _NOT_ sufficiently compensated.

3046. The "Gridlock" Bogeyman

Whenever the party that controls the White House does not also control Capitol Hill, political pundits worry that there will be "gridlock" in Washington, so that the government cannot solve the nation's problems.

Almost never is that fear based on what actually happens when there is divided government, compared to what happens when one party has a monopoly of both legislative and executive branches.

The last time the federal government had a budget surplus, instead of its usual deficits, there was divided government. That was when the Republicans controlled the House of Representatives, where all spending bills originate, and Bill Clinton was in the White House. The media called it "the Clinton surplus."

By the same token, some of the worst laws ever passed were passed when one party had overwhelming majorities in both houses of Congress, as well as being led by their own President of the United States. ObamaCare is a product of the kind of arrogance that so much power breeds.

It was the same story back in the famous "first hundred days" of the New Deal in 1933. The National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933 clamped down on the American economy the kind of pervasive government control seldom seen outside of totalitarian countries.

It was the ObamaCare of its time, but covering industries right down to local dry cleaners. One man was sent to jail for charging less than the government-specified price for pressing a suit of clothes. This typified the mindset of the New Deal.

Fortunately, the Supreme Court eventually declared the National Industrial Recovery Act unconstitutional. But, before that happened, the N.I.R.A. probably did more to prevent the economy from recovering from the Great Depression than any other law or policy. Even liberal icon John Maynard Keynes said at the time that the N.I.R.A. "probably impedes recovery."

You cannot tell what effect a law or policy will have by what politicians call it, whether they label it a "recovery" program or a "stimulus" program.

Those who fear gridlock in Washington today implicitly assume that government actions are needed to "solve" the economy's "problems." That assumption has been so pervasive over the past 80 years that many people fail to realize that the republic existed for nearly twice that long before the federal government intervened to get the economy out of a recession or depression.

During all that time, no depression ever lasted even half as long as the Great Depression of the 1930s, when first President Hoover and then President Roosevelt intervened.

For most of the history of this country, there was no Federal Reserve System, which was established in 1914 to prevent bank failures and the bad effects of large expansions or contractions of the supply of money and credit. But bank failures in the 1930s exceeded anything ever seen before the Fed was established. So did the contraction of money and credit during the Great Depression.

The seductive notion that some Big Daddy in Washington can solve our problems for us-- whether healing the sick, preventing poverty or "growing the economy"-- is encouraged by politicians for obvious reasons, and the media echo the idea.

Both in Washington and in the media, there is virtually zero interest in comparing what actually happens when the federal government intervenes in the economy and when it does not.

More than a century and a half of ignoring downturns in the economy never produced a depression as deep or as long as the 1930s depression, with its many federal interventions, first under Herbert Hoover and then under Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The unemployment rate was 6.3 percent when the first big intervention took place, during the Hoover administration. It later peaked at 25 percent, but its fluctuations were always in double digits throughout the 1930s, as FDR tried one thing after another. As late as the spring of 1939, nearly a decade after the stock market crash of 1929, unemployment hit 20 percent again.

It is not a matter of faith that a market economy can recover on its own. It is a matter of faith that politicians speed recovery. But there is no way that Barack Obama is going to stop intervening in the economy unless he gets stopped. Only gridlock can do that.

I think I bought the clock before the US modification of the transition dates a few years ago. The old date for the saving to standard transition WAS the last week in October, and the clock hasn't been goofing up between that weekend and the current first week of November transition. I do have a few other (non RC) devices that have the old date programed into firmware that insist on switching on the old dates.

Interesting. It seems to be a variation on number one, with degree of entropy substituted for clock ticks or rubidium pulses. I believe that some elements decay at regular rates, but I've never looked into exactly _how_ regular they are.

For me, though, the experiments that show beyond any question that there is no such thing as universal simultaneity are proof enough that time is a dimension.

The unemployment calculations have not changed simply because Obama is now the president. If we wish to compare the state of the economy to the past then we can't be changing the way we account for unemployment. Having said that, I will say that wages are going to suffer greatly because of the glut of labor caused by off shoring American production. Obama did not do that. It was done long before he can to town.

That is pig shit, of course. But we would expect nothing less. I am one of the sane people who understands that technological innovation and capital development along with consolidation has dramatically reduced the need for labor. There will be an army of unemployed and the only proper address is a reduction in the work week. Make it very expensive for employers and small business people to "hog" pay less people to work extended hours.

Does shortwave radio still exist in today's time? Do any countries still broadcast to the U.S.?

I can get all those countries I listened to in the 1990's on podcasts now on itunes. I wouldn't mind a new shortwave to play around with but... I think the fun factor would fade quickly. It's not old technology, it's really really really old technology.

I read Passport to World Band Radio closed shop. Sad but, sign of the times.

The problem with your post is that you blame everyone but the right ones. You blame the Democrats for a false economy built on a financial bubble. The aftermath will, in fact, produce exactly what we have. The Republicans have fought every attempt at improving the economy. Yet you blame Obama. The Congress has been disfunctional and that is because of the cloture rules in the Senate. It is fair to blame Harry Reid for this problem, but not Obama and Pelosi.

Passport became a victim of several negative trends: poor sales/circulation of printed periodicals/books everywhere due to IT, poor / inferior propagation time period , general interest of SW hobby nowhere near it was just 10 years ago . Plus the current globaleconomic crisis . Plus loss of interest in manufacture of good / decent hardware . Most of the current production is a myriad of extremely low-end portables from PRC . But, we have to remember, that SW is the only mass medium in the world that cannot be shut down / controlled 100% by anyone . Other than nature itself !

If the Republican House does actually oppose Obama, I may break my anti-incumbent policy and vote to return my Republican Representative to office. From where I sit, little Obama has done has been good for the USA, and much of it has been very bad.

Very few. For example, the BBC no longer does. This is a combination of internet, satellite (and with that cable TV), and the Gates Foundation paying NPR to broadcast their news programs.

The fun factor is what you want it to be. If you are looking for content, then the internet is the place you want to be. If you are looking for chalenge, a need for skill, and just tweaking dials, then radio is for you.

To be honest, these days, I get most of my spoken news from Jay Leno. I get my written news from the internet. I get the enjoyment of playing with the radio from the radio. All very different things.

> I read Passport to World Band Radio closed shop. Sad but, sign of the > times.

The concept of "up to date" has changed. While the passport was up to date, it often was not as far as the latest reviews, commentary on their old reviews, schedules, etc.

People want to be able to look up what's on and what frequency it's on for today, not a speculation six months or a year old. They want to know how a radio that is just coming on to the market performs, not the one that came out two years ago, but by the time the reviewer was sent one, spent a few months with it and it went through the editorial process performed.

It's interesting, I have been on usenet for almost 20 years and remember these discussions in the early 1990s. In those days, it was usenet postings and emails that were going to kill those publications and even shortwave, today it's the web and podcasting.

But the dog had little to do with it. It was from a painting of a casket with a then rare phonograph where the person who died had mad a recording to be played at their funeral. The dog was painted as sitting and listening to the recording with the title of the painting being "His Master's Voice".

It was not Nipper (Edison's dog).

The rights to the painting were bought and used as symbol of the company, with the casket removed.

- If the Republican House does actually oppose Obama,
- I may break my anti-incumbent policy and vote to
- return my Republican Representative to office.
- From where I sit, little Obama has done has been
- good for the USA, and much of it has been very bad.

David Hartung,

Idiot's-R-Us : This NOV 2010 US National Election : Throw The Bums Of Both Parties Out ! ! !
http://groups.google.com/group/rec.radio.shortwave/msg/eb8e5b92e0d0b7a4

FWIW - If there is 'Gridlock' in 2011 and 2012
then Throw The Bums Of Both Parties Out in 2012 again and 2014 Again and 2016 AGAIN ! ! !

That was apparently the 'feelings*' of the American US Citizen Voters this NOV 2010 Election.

FIRST - The Obama 'Mandate' of 2008 NO longer Exists [.]
-why- The Election of 2010 VOIDED* It Out [.]

* In American Politics a 'Mandate' is Only Good Until the Next Election.
IMHO the American US Citizen Voter's 2010 "Mandate" is a Mid-Course-Correction to 'Refine' and Roll-Back some of the Excessive* Obama-Pelosi-Reid Agenda.

SECOND - The US Congress has to Come-Up with a more 'moderate' middle-of-the-road approach to :
National Health-Care; Massive US Federal Government Spending; and Say NO To More Taxes; and Say NO To Higher Taxes.

THIRD - PUT AMERICAN US CITIZENS BACK TO WORK !
Grow Jobs In The USA : Not in India and Indonesia

Prez Obama a "LAME DUCK" ?-WHY-?

1 - Most like Prez Obama is a One Termer
-and- Will do an LBJ and NOT Run in 2012
-or- Run and Lose in 2012

2 - To "Get Things Done" Prez Obama has to 'Compromise' and 'Work-With' the Republicans :
Then BHO will have some Accomplishments to point-out for his 3rd & 4th years and could then potentially run for and win a 2nd term.

3 - To Create "Gridlock" all Prez Obama has to do is continue to DICTATE and OPPOSE Any Compromise with the Republicans : Then BHO will have NO ['0' NADA] accomplishments to point-out for his 3rd & 4th years; except that he fought the Republicans tooth-and-nail on each and every issue; most like then BHO could potentially run for a 2nd term; but he would lose.
Conclusion : Prez Obama -is- The "Gridlock" Bogeyman !

I'd be delighted to discuss it (provided you can refrain from your earlier disgusting language).

But please do answer the question about what makes you think that West Virginia is my home state. It's an odd assumption.

Secondly, I actually agree that some racially diverse economies are more productive than some that are essentially monoracial. For example, racially diverse Mississippi is far more productive than monoracial Uganda. But it is not more productive than essentially monoracial Finland or Japan.

With all good wishes, and do please answer the question without personal invective,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

I don't care what he does, or what he does not do. Indeed, I would have been overjoyed if he would have never been president and I was never even aware of him.

However, if he does this at work. In an office I provide him, on time I pay him to work ... he needed to HIT THE ROAD!

Clinton has shamed America and all American citizens for all time ... but, like I have said, even since Kennedy, this nation has been without a real president ...

The difference is that Kennedy didn't wave his finger at the nation and deny it. Clinton did.

Kennedy, for all his failings, at least had the thinnest veneer of honorability.

Clinton was a lying hillbilly sack of shit that would never have gotten as high as he did had it not been for the mysterious disappearance, death, and 'suicides' of those who got in his way.

Oh, damn....did I say that out loud?

On the other hand, 9PM last night (10 Nov, about 05:15 UTC), the only English I could get was Radio New Zealand (11725 kHz or somewhere around there), the ghost of Gene Scott (6090? kHz), and Arnie Coro (Radio Havana) (two or three signals in the 6 MHz band). (Seattle).

Radio Aus. is still up in the 15 and 13 MHz bands that early and they just were not there (last night, it's very condition dependent). They come in a lot better in the early hours down in the 6, 7 and 9 Mhz bands. So does the Beeb on 6195 and 5875 kHz.

Right now, (10 Nov, 15:00 UTC), Radio Aus. is 20 db over s9 on 7240 kHz. (Pity that the Russian try to share, starting at 16:00. Doesn't work.) 11880 kHz is coming in good these days, starting at 18:00.

Yes and yes, though it's declining, it's not yet obsolete. There still is no acceptable substitute which can reach populations whose governments don't allow certain views to be broadcast domestically.

And even when there is, the ionosphere and the laws of physics will remain. Some use will continue to be mad of the ability to bounce signals off the ionosphere (free of any satellite transponder rental charges). It's just too convenient to be ignored. It may be a very different mix of uses than what exists today, but (absent a total collapse of technological society) I really don't see shortwave being completely abandoned.

It's not even 100 years old! How can it be considered "old", yet alone "really old"? Stone knives and axes, now there's a really really old technology!

One publication going out of business does not mean shortwave has completely disappeared.

The money was not spent in pursuit of the blowjob, but rather the perjury on the witness stand that revealed it.

A lot of people don't use SW radios primarily for listening to AM broadcast stations. Some people like to hunt beacons, monitor military frequencies, listen to aeronautical comms, amateur radio operators, etc. Broadcast listening is only one slice of a large pie.

Kurt: These guys on Usenet.
Lawyer: What the fuck is Usenet?
Kurt: It's like the Internet.
Lawyer: OK, whatever. Why do you want me to sue them?
Kurt: They won't stop making fun of me.

Kurt: No.
Lawyer: Okaaaay, and how are they making fun of you, Mr. Harrington?
Kurt: It's Harrington-Lochner!
Lawyer: Yeah, that's great. And how are they making fun of you?
Kurt: They're calling me a deadbeat because . . . because I can't pay all my bills.
Lawyer: And how would strangers from the Internet know about your bills?
Kurt (willing the floor to open up and swallow him whole): Cuz of the court documents.
Lawyer: Court documents, you say . . . yes, I guess that would be a matter of public record.
Kurt: Uh huh.
Lawyer: What sort of bills are we talking?
Kurt: My physical therapist.
Lawyer: And what's your therapist's name?
Kurt: Gary.
<long pause>
Lawyer: Did you say Gary?
Kurt (nervous now): Yeah . . .
Lawyer: Are we talking about Gary over at Northwest Physical Therapy?
Kurt (voice breaking like a pubescent teenager's): Uh huh . . .

Lawyer: Gary's my brother!

Well, I'll be....my message did get out.

Terrific,

and I re-worked all the batch files for some other feeds too. Here's what I've been reading of late. "Out There"-remarkable yet kinda hurried, which matters little to me. I find that book to be pretty credible, though non-commital. Yes, it answers the question that's been in everybody's mind for some time, unanswered by any kind of authority (plural). So, great...there IS some kind of coverup, but what's being covered up?

As I've said earlier, the Air Force and any others engaged in the subject have not generated a single reason or explanation to satisfy themselves to declassify anything of importance. Perhaps the outer "arms" of this galaxy, the Orion Arm being our district, are a little more crowded than even Drake's Equation permits?

"Above Top Secret" hehehe, I can't keep from skipping ahead to see some of the more recent sightings. Again, we have the texts of MJ-12 and several plates of some pleasent faces, and some of the international sightings are really well done. It's not easy reading but it's interesting to find parts about the nuts/bolts.

And that's what I really wrote to you about..

I've been making noises about the propulsion scenarios involved with these sighting. Letting the sightings display the overall characteristics of such a machine saves alot of guesswork. The international sightings pointed it out, at least to me, when one guy said that it sounded kinda like a refrigerator taking off.

Later in the book, a guy that was present at some questionable crash recovery sight later on told his daughter that the craft operate on water, and that it might threaten the oil industry. To support this conjecture, I believe that if I was pressed to do, I could find a significant number of sightings around water, and I recall some from earlier publications of observing hoses in the water. If you think that boiling water under pressure does marvelous energy transfers, try thinking about water in a partial vacumn...or ammonia, or even methane.

So, in closing, I can see that my previous posting was pretty useless, I'll try not to waste bandwidth again until I've caught up my reading, but I thought that I might be able to add some useful conjecture as to what kind of "cover-up" might be occurring.

Thanks for the stats, that was real big help.

It is only possible to wreck the nation by controlling the House. IN order to move forward and to improve the nation for the sake of its people both houses of the Congress AND the executive must be on board.
Any progressive legislation can be killed by veto (Bush), or by filibuster (lock step Republicans).

OK fine. The nation seem to do quite well as far as debt and trade balance is concerned until the Republicans took the presidency and the Senate in 1981. Since that time the Republicans have controlled 2 of the <<<<<<<<<<<<< India Pig Shit Deleted >>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>

Since 1981 the Republicans have had a veto on progressive legislation all for all years because of the Senate rules. Never have the Democrats had control of the government but for 2 months in 2009. And with that control they passed a very ruptured health care reform bill knowing they could repair it in reconciliation. The Health Care Law is still insufficient. The Wall Street reform is also cluttered with Republican weasel traps. There is no real legislation. Only the creation of oversight. If the Republicans own the oversight then we are back to square one.

The Democrats have done well so far against the Republican blockade. I am pretty sure that we will be able to sever the tax cuts for the rich from the tax cuts for the middle class and again show that Republicans are lying pigs sucking the butts of the rich.

But I don't know if that will actually do any good. The economy is going to advance very well over the next two years and the Republicans will claim that they did it by lock stepping the House. The reality is that world wide currency devaluation will take away a good bit of the power of the rich and that will allow the real economies to recover.

Here is a quote from Mein Kampf:

"The fight which Fascist Italy waged against Jewry's three principal weapons, the profound reasons for which may not have been consciously understood (though I do not believe this myself) furnishes the best proof that the poison fangs of that Power which transcends all State boundaries are being drawn, even though in an indirect way.
The prohibition of Freemasonry and secret societies, the suppression of the supranational Press and the definite abolition of Marxism, together with the steadily increasing consolidation of the Fascist concept of the State--all this will enable the Italian Government, in the course of some years, to advance more and more the interests of the Italian people without paying any attention to the hissing of the Jewish world-hydra.
"The English situation is not so favorable. In that country which has 'the freest democracy' the Jew dictates his will, almost unrestrained but indirectly, through his influence on public opinion."

Most remote sensors only transmit periodic short data bursts, whereas

That thing was clearly a missile. It looks like an SLBM to me. Those who claim it was an airplane are either stupid or deliberately lying. It is very troubling that NORAD didn't detect it (or so they say). I'd like to know what the missile's trajectory was. Where did it go?

My guess: North Korea, China, Iran, Russia, or an accidental US Navy launch. I say accidental because I doubt we'd be testing SLBMs so close to land.

Perjury of a public official trying to deny a citizen her day in court by lying on the witness stand is not a case of merely lying about a blowjob.

What's interesting, is that that during these proceedings, the very same perjury prosecutions for the very same infractions were pursued against a commanding General, a Senatorial aide, and any number of business executives.

And you did not complain the cost of pursuing those.

Which suggests a type of political immunity based on your personal agenda.

Imagine my surprise.

Actually the Republicans have a Compromise for Prez Obama :

Prez Obama Wants a New Higher Tax on Incomes of $250K and above.

The Republicans say that they could agree to a New Higher Tax on Incomes of $1M and above.

The Half-Way-Point is ~$625K = ($250K+$1M)/2
-or- 2X $250K = $500K {Obama Times Two}
-and- 1/2 of $1M = $500K {Republicans by Half}

Looks like there is room for a Political {Two Party} Compromise -if- Prez Obama can get past
We Will Do It My-Way -or- Not At All [.] Attitude

Actually -if- the Upper Bracket was Divided and Stepped from 35% bracket rises to 39.6%{40%} $375K ~ $750K @ 36% [Income Doubles & 1% Increase] $751K ~ $1.5M @ 37% [Income Doubles & 1% Increase]
$1.5M+ ~ $3M @ 38% [Income Doubles & 1% Increase]
$3M+ ~ $6M @ 39% [Income Doubles & 1% Increase]
$6M+ ~ $12M @ 40% [Income Doubles & 1% Increase] +plus+add+2+more+steps+for+the+super+rich+
$12M+ ~ $36M @ 45% [Delta $24M @45% You Keep $13M]
$36M+ @ 50% [After $36M You Keep $1 out of $2]

- and 22% said cutting the huge defense budget
- was the best way to go.

Yeah the USA's Defense Budget {Spending} is Equal to All of the Rest of the World Combined
-read- World Wide Military Expenditures http://www.globalsecurity.org/military/world/spending.htm
So a real 5% Reduction each Year for a Decade would result in a net 40% Reduction in 10 Years the first Year would yield $55B Savings with a Decade Total Saving of $3T.
-presently-
USA Defense Spending = $623B
China + Russia Combined Defense Spending = $115B
USA -to- China & Russia = 5.4 to 1

-one-decade-later-
USA Defense Spending = $374B {-5%CR*}
China + Russia Combined Defense Spending = $187B {+5%CR*}
USA -to- China & Russia = 2 to 1
* Compounded Rate +Increase or -Decrease

YES - DOD needs to take some Gradual Long-Term planned Budget Reductions over a Decade.

I strongly support a tax increase. Not just for the wealthy but for myself as well. There is no other way mathematically to get a handle on the national debt before it becomes so large that we spend all of our tax dollars paying off interest and we automatically default.

- That thing was clearly a missile.
- It looks like an SLBM to me.
- Those who claim it was an airplane
- are either stupid or deliberately lying.
- It is very troubling that NORAD didn't detect it
- (or so they say).
- I'd like to know what the missile's trajectory was.
- Where did it go?
- My guess: North Korea, China, Iran, Russia,
- or an accidental US Navy launch.
- I say accidental because I doubt we'd be
- testing SLBMs so close to land.

There's a growing number of amateur operators, experimenters really, using the AM mode on shortwave, too. You can find them on 3700-3735 kHz, 3860-3890 kHz, 7285-7295 kHz, and a few other spots too.

What's interesting about them is that some are real experimenters and run transmitters with superb fidelity, some sounding better than commercial broadcast stations.

With all good wishes,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

Won't work. There was a proposal a few years back called the Ten/Ten plan. It would apply to everybody and every corporation.

It goes like this:

a) The first ten thousand dollars made is tax exempt.

b) Ten percent of all earnings above that is payable in tax.

c) There are no exemptions or deductions allowed.

The well to do discovered that this simple plan would cause them to pay roughly 300 percent more in taxes than they do now, under the graduated system. The fact that it benefits the lower and what's left of the middle class doesn't matter to them.

Check the Talmud (Gittin 57b) and then tell me if it's true or not. If it isn't true, then the author in the Holy book is lying. If he is lying, why should ANY holocaust story be believed?

As a historical document the scholars tend to quote Josephus Flavius.
Being a real contemporary witness his estimate of the dead in Jerusalem is 1.1 million people . That figure is actually higher than the official population today . On the other hand, how many scholars of the ancient world ever used a religious text as a historical document ?

ARTHRNY,

Given all the cited numbers; Rome was the largest City of it era and only totaled around 1.2 Million at it's peak. Urbanization in the Ancient World at the time was only around 11%. The Population of Jerusalem prior to 1900 was never more that 250K.

Mike [M II] your statement was to exploit a numberial item {error of translation and/or

You then go on to extend your argument {based

Not yet...but some of the things he has said on the TV circuit touting his book are enough to make you choke.

When questioned about the Iraq war, his main answer was "The world is a better place without Saddam".

Well, IMHO there are two problems with that:

1) Iraqi citizens are part of the world, and -they- don't seem to be "better off"; tens of thousands of them dead, no sewage treatment, no water, no electricity because we bombed the snot out of their infrastructure, no jobs and suicide bombings every couple of days. Is that "better off"? W thinks so.

2) Just for the sake of this discussion, assume "the world is a better place without Saddam".

Even if that is true, was it worth the price?

4,000 dead Americans, 10,000 maimed Americans and a T-R-I-L-L-I-O-N dollars. Just to get rid of Saddam, one guy?

Mike [M II],

Anything will Work with the Full Force of Law and the Mighty Authority of the US Federal Government behind it [.]

USA Circa 2000 :
The USA is a Net Importer of Goods; and for a Nation that is a Consumer Nation a Flat Tax System based on Point of Sale : Levies the Same
'Equal' Tax on both Imported and Domestic Goods.
Thus Imported Goods Pay Their Fair Share of the Cost of our American Society and US Government.

USA Circa 1900 :
The old Income System served the USA well when the USA was a Net Exporter of Goods; cause for every Exported Item Sold Overseas there was a [Hidden] Tax based on the Cost of Production which included the Salaries {Income} paid to produce it; and the Taxes paid on those Salaries.

Flat-Tax+PLUS : {What's The 'Plus' ?}
The PLUS Part of the Flat Tax System recognizes that beyond a certain level of Consumption; the Rich/Wealth do not pay their equal and fair cost of supporting and maintaining our American Society and US Government. So above a certain Income level the High Income Earners* Pay a Flat Tax that is equal to the National Single Point-of-Sale Sales Tax.

* Average USA Individual Income $50K -so- The Flat Income Tax would start at Five Times [5X] that amount $250K on Individual Incomes with No Deductions.
-note- NO Joint Returns

So whatever the National Flat Sales Tax Rate is : The National Flat Income Tax Rate would be Double [2X].
* National Flat Sales Tax Rate = 10% / 15% / 20%
-then-double-two-times-
* National Flat Income Tax Rate = 20% / 30% / 40%
Corporate Taxes in a National Flat Tax System : US Corporate* Taxes all Investment/Reinvestment in the USA is Un-Taxed; and all Foreign Investment is Taxed at the National Flat Income Tax Rate.

* Applies to US Charitable Corporations {Foundations} Do Good {Spend} in the USA Tax Free
-and- Do Good {Spend} in Oversea Pay Flat Tax

 Foreign Corporate Taxes all Investment/Reinvestment in the USA is Un-Taxed; and all Moneys Sent Overseas is Taxed at the National Flat Income Tax Rate.

- There was a proposal a few years back called
- the Ten/Ten plan. It would apply to everybody
- and every corporation.
- It goes like this:
- a) The first ten thousand dollars made is tax exempt.

That is well below the USA's Poverty Level
-so- It would start to Tax part of the Income of People Living in Poverty. =BAD=

The better System Looks at the National 'Average' Income and uses that as the "Taxable" Income Threshold Bench-Mark
-results-in-
1st - The Lower-Half [-50%] of the Income Population is Un-Taxed : NO Paperwork & No Administration Cost
-note- Reduces the Higher Cost of Administration for very little relative Tax Revenue.

2nd - The Upper-Half [+50%] of the Income Population is Taxed : Requiring Paperwork plus Administration Cost
-note- Lower Cost of Administration for every Tax Dollar Collected and Greater Tax Revenue.

The Poverty Level Plus Alternative :
By using Two to Three Times [2X~3X] The Poverty Level Income as the "Taxable" Income Threshold Bench-Mark

The Average Plus One Sigma Alternative : Places 59% {6 out of 10} Income Earners below
the "Taxable" Income Threshold Bench-Mark

- b) Ten percent of all earnings above that is
- payable in tax.

The general 'estimate' is a Flat Tax would have to be around 17%~18% to meet the Revenue needs of the US Federal Government.

- c) There are no exemptions or deductions allowed.

That is Good and Fair since it treats all Income Equally; irrespective of personal circumstances.

- The well to do discovered that this simple plan
- would cause them to pay roughly 300 percent more
- in taxes than they do now, under the graduated
- system.

Beyond Basic Needs for Living and Luxury Items to Enrich Life "The Well-to-Do" have a part of their Income and Wealth that is Excessive and Disposable : Which Should in-the-name-of 'Social Justice' be Taxed at a Higher Rate then the Average Working Man/Women Supporting a Family.

- The fact that it benefits the lower and what's
- left of the middle class doesn't matter to them.

Who is 'them' ? : "The Well-to-Do" ?

The Tax System should Benefit All Members of Society Equally : Poor, Average and Rich.

Plus the Tax System should Support Society and the Government to Assure Equitable of Basic Rights within the Society and Uniformity of Basic Services provided by the Government to All Citizens.

That's like asking "What's experimental about audio?" The answer is:
an almost infinite number of things.

Some things with which I or my friends have been personally involved that relate to AM experimentation:

1. Building new kinds of AM/DSB detectors, including ultra-low distortion detectors, synchronous detectors, stereo (I/Q and U/L) synchronous detectors, autocorrelation detectors, et cetera.

2. Refining and extending the state of the art in AM transmission, including Class E and Class D transmitters, pulse-duration modulation, multiphase pulse duration modulation, I/Q multichannel modulation, outphasing modulation, use of mathematical transforms for AM/DSB generation, et cetera.

3. Study of the effectiveness of wider-bandwidth modes with varying degrees of information redundancy in varying communications conditions, including AM/DSB versus SSB (the late John Costas, W2CRR, an amateur AM operator and experimenter, was the pioneer here, with his "Poisson, Shannon, and the Radio Amateur" in Proceedings of the IRE).

4. Experimentation with audio processing, including multiband AGC, compressors, distortion-cancelled clipping, audio phase rotators, et cetera (one of the pioneers in this field, Mike Dorrough, is an amateur AM operator).

I am sure there are many more examples of AM experimentation than I am even aware of. It's a mode that seems to attract those with an experimental bent. Very few AM hams are running stock commercial gear; usually, at the very least, it is modified for better quality audio.

Hearing the best of these operators on a receiver with superb audio -- say, an SP-600 in the 13 kHz bandwidth, with the detector output fed into a high-fidelity amplifier driving a pair of AR-3ax speakers -- brings you the true magic of radio in a way that must be heard to be believed.

With all good wishes,

Kevin.

I would think that HAMs would try an adapt to and use DRM Transmission versus IBOC.

DRM is Direct Digital and more efficient for one-to-one direct communications.

IBOC is a Hybrid Analog/Digital and is only valuable as a backwardly compatible System for Transitioning from Analog to Digital.

During the time of the Roman Empire, the Jews wanted to foment hatred against the Romans, and they concocted "Holocaust" stories every bit as absurd and lurid as the ones they concocted more recently about the Germans and Iraqis. One such tale can be found in their holy book, the Talmud, in the Midrash Rabbah, though I think it likely that the story had a wide circulation at the time.

According to the Talmud, in the year 132 AD the Romans slaughtered the Jews in the town of Bethar. Bethar was a small town about ten miles southwest of Jerusalem, and it had an area of approximately five city blocks -- one source gives its area as about 600 meters by 200 meters. Not only did the Romans kill every Jew in Bethar, but according to the named and "authoritative" rabbis writing in the Talmud, the number of Jews killed there was 800,000,000! Just in case such a number might seem a tad exaggerated, the Talmud makes it all clear by informing us that the blood of the holocausted Jews ran to the sea in a huge tidal wave that swept boulders in its path and was so deep that it reached the nostrils of the Romans' horses. The crimson tide of Jewish blood, we are told, roared over 35 miles to the sea, where it stained the waters red four miles from the shore.

Not only did 800,000,000 Jews live in Bethar, but they lived in luxurious ease, and within those 600 by 200 meters were 64,000,000 Jewish schoolchildren who attended schools operated by the 400 synagogues. We are additionally informed that the evil Romans wrapped each of the schoolchildren in his scroll and burned all of them, and that the bodies of the Jews were then used to build a wall enclosing Hadrian's vineyard, which was 18 miles square and the Jewish blood that was salvaged from the tidal wave was used as fertilizer for seven years.

Wicked persons who doubt that Jews always tell the truth will claim that these figures are impossible, but they forget that Jewish truthfulness is a constant, like the "c" in E=mc2. So, the 800,000,000 Jews of Bethar, if arranged in a square with no space between them, must have numbered 28,284 on a side. And since the area of Bethar is equal to a square 346 meters or 13,638 inches on a side, we can easily reason that each Jew must have been, at the most, one half inch in width.

It could be argued that all of Bethar might have consisted of three-storey buildings, which would allow us Jews an inch and a half in width, but if we posit two Jews' width between each Jew to permit some movement, we are back where we started, with Jews that could not possibly have been larger than horseflies.

Since Jews always tell the truth, this poses a challenge to the evolutionary biologists to show us how the Jews rapidly evolved from insect-size creatures in only 2,000 years. And historians will be hard-pressed to account for the fact that the diminutive size of the Jews was not noted by any contemporary writer.

Just to be clear on my personal feelings, since they are bound to be misrepresented: I have no animus against Jews or any other race or people. I do believe that Jews have suffered, but I think that lying by their leaders, and exploiting others, and promoting multiracial societies as a form of genocidal warfare, is going to cause further suffering and destruction beyond anything experienced before. And I believe that they should put a stop to those behaviors by their leaders, for the good of all races and peoples.

With every good wish,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

Why the nasty language? This is an unmoderated newsgroup, and I think it's perfectly all right if regular, genuine posters drift off topic from time to time -- just like conversations in a lounge or restaurant, they don't have to end up where they started.
(Purposeful efforts to disrupt a newsgroup are a different story.)

I just posted about amateur experimentation on HF just a few minutes ago. In a few hours I'll be posting my weekly article about amateur radio's Liberty Net.

I don't collect QSLs much, though I once had a few that were precious to me, and my entire collction -- and _all_ of my shortwave gear -- was stolen in collusion with the criminals in the FBI, who falsely charged me with crimes because of my political views.

Since then, I've purchased an Eton E1.

We're trying to avoid proprietary code on the ham bands, for obvious reasons. Amplitude Modulation is a pretty mature technology; they got into PDM, PWM, etc. way before switch mode power supplies and Class D audio amps.

Depends on the Pitch of the Awning http://www.westcoastawning.com/images/Horizontal-Awning.gif http://www.mobilehomeadvantage.com/images/ABSwindowawning.jpg

-and- whether you have open or closed Sides.
http://www.aluminum-awning.com/content/images/Aluminum-Window-Awning.jpg

-also- which side of the House that the Awnings are on South-Sunny or North-Shade

Often the South-Sunny Awnings are wider than the Windows and project-out more to provide Shading of the Window all day long.

Likewise except for 'style' and uniformity of the Window treatment all around the House North Side Awnings often are not needed.

The other consideration is Weather.
Many locations can get away with with light weight Aluminum Awnings.
Heavy Weather locations will need Sturdily Built Awnings that can handle Snow/Ice a/o Strong Winds.

Just viewed a Single Story House down in Columbia, CA that had an 8-Foot Veranda around 3-Sides with Concert Patios.
The North 4th-Side has 4-Foot Eaves.
The Roof Height and Area was so big to accommodate the Verandas that a 2~3 Lane Bowling Alley could be fitted into the Attic. -no-awnings-required-
The Builder/Home-Owner figures that the Verandas will Reduce the Summer Heat Load on the House and Cut down the AC Costs.

Alex Jones is hardly a source of "information". Look at this from Jones:

http://www.infowars.com/recently-surfaced-video-shows-numerous-mass-grave-crypts-in-houston/

Jones shows us a video of "mass graves" at a Veterans Cemetery. The phrase 'mass graves' conjures up images of a bulldozer pushing dead bodies into a large pit at Auschwitz. The cemetery in Houston is hardly that. The Veterans Cemetery is merely running out of room for burials, but Jones wants to put a sinister slant on it.

Insulting.

Things I don't like:

1. The radio's finished in some kind of rubbery, slightly sticky material that attracts dust and dirt and is hard to clean.

2. The display contrast is less than optimal.

3. The audio has a peak in the response around 3 kHz that is annoying, though the audio is amazingly good in every other way.

4. There is a loose connection in the built-in antenna or its associated jacks that sometimes crops up and I haven't been able to trace it.

5. There is a small but annoying ambient-temperature variation in frequency, which makes the dial calibration off by as much as 150 Hz if you are outside in hot or cold weather.

Things I do like:

1. It has a nice wide bandwidth available (called 7 kHz, but more like 8 kHz really), which sounds pretty good on AM. I do wish they had a 15 kHz bandwidth for strong signals, though.

2. They have a 4 kHz bandwidth filter too, just about right for ESSB (enhanced SSB). The 2.7 kHz is there for bad conditions if you need it. All filters are available in all modes.

3. Except for the aforementioned peak, the audio circuitry is wideband and the response limits are set solely by the IF filters. Sub-100 Hz audio is ample on headphones, and even the built in speaker is medium fidelity, though not too loud. Distortion is low.

4. The D cells give me decent battery life, a pleasant surprise.

5. The overload resistance of the receiver is amazing for the price, far better than some commercial amateur transceivers and professional receivers of just a decade ago.

6. The synchronous detector and its associated sideband-reject phasing circuitry is well implemented and has very good fidelity. I do wish they had implemented stereo sync detection, which they could have easily done adding a couple of switch positions to the detector outputs.

All in all, an amazing piece of engineering.

With all good wishes,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

America has woken up to the fact that much of our fiscal crisis at the state and federal levels has been caused by the rich salary, benefit, and pension packages of government workers. Chris Christie, Republican Governor of New Jersey, has become a YouTube sensation by clearly articulating the problem. So does this USA Today article: http://www.usatoday.com/news/nation/2010-11-10-1Afedpay10_ST_N.htm

The number of federal workers earning $150,000 or more a year has soared tenfold in the past five years and doubled since President Obama took office, a USA TODAY analysis finds.

The fast-growing pay of federal employees has captured the attention of fiscally conservative Republicans who won control of the U.S. House of Representatives in last week's elections. Already, some lawmakers are planning to use the lame-duck session that starts Monday to challenge the president's plan to give a 1.4% across-the-board pay raise to 2.1 million federal workers.

Federal workers earning $150,000 or more make up 3.9% of the workforce, up from 0.4% in 2005. Since 2000, federal pay and benefits have increased 3% annually above inflation compared with 0.8% for private workers

Compounding the fiscal time bomb (a nuclear one at that) is the fact that the government work force has also grown tremendously over the years.

There has been a long-running vicious cycle playing out over the years. Politicians (mostly, but not exclusively, Democrats) have been signing generous agreements with government workers and their unions. In return, the government workers provide a solid voting block, and the public employee unions can use their enlarged dues to funnel money to Democratic campaigns. There was a reason -- beyond their leftist ideological beliefs and animus towards businesses -- that both Barack and Michelle Obama counseled people to go to work for the government. Those government workers become a special interest group in the pockets of Pelosi and company.

Bolstering the number of people on the government payroll brings us one step closer to the type of European socialism that seems to be on the agenda of Barack Obama. (See Stanley Kurtz's new book Radical-in-Chief if you still harbor skepticism as to the fact that Barack Obama is a closet socialist.)

Indeed, government workers, as Morton Zuckerman (U.S. News Editor in Chief) writes, have become "the new privileged class."

The American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) was the single biggest independent group spending money during the recent election cycle, blowing past the Chamber of Commerce and every Republican-leaning group.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB10001424052702303339504575566481761790288.html

The union's president happily bragged that they were spending big -- $87.5 million just in this cycle -- and was "damn happy it's big." They weren't the only ones happy. Democrats received virtually all of the money (originally our money, by the way).

A huge chunk of the so-called stimulus money went not to shovel-ready projects (that we now know Barack Obama and other Democrats knew did not exist -- they were just useful props), but to save or create government jobs and to ensure that continued money was channeled into government workers' hands. Much of the money went to police, firemen, teachers, and other government workers. Question: does this help our balance of payments?

The decision-makers who grant lavish packages to government workers have no reason to exercise restraint, and no one is looking out for the taxpayers (though Obama has hired a slew of new IRS agents to look at us). The problem is that no one cares about Other People's Money.

Our tax dollars are just one big slush fund to lube the Democratic election campaigns in a seemingly endless recycling campaign: dollars extracted from us get sucked up to Washington (one of the few boom towns in America, where average salaries blow away most other cities in America) and then are showered onto government workers whose salaries already dwarf salaries in the private sector for comparable jobs.

http://www.heritage.org/Research/Reports/2010/07/Inflated-Federal-Pay-How-Americans-Are-Overtaxed-to-Overpay-the-Civil-Service

Democrats know a good deal when they see one. While they still exercised almost unfettered control of Congress, they pushed for an emergency $23-billion "stimulus" bill for teachers. This was done when their political polling numbers were in decline -- as was the amount that previously friendly business donors were willing to cough up. After all, the Democrats turned on business leaders and delivered some tongue-lashings to Wall Street donors who had been quite generous over the years to Democrats. How to gin up more union campaign help? Pass the extra stimulus bill to channel more money to government workers and, via their mandatory dues to the unions, into campaign coffers of the unions, who then recycled that money back into helping to elect Democrats.

http://biggovernment.com/kolson/2010/05/05/emergency-education-jobs-bill-is-really-a-union-dues-bailout-bill/

A perpetual money-machine -- until the music stopped. And it stopped because citizens saw what was going on in Greece, and then they saw our future. We saw the superstar Chris Christie stare down the unions and appeal to the taxpayers. We saw it as reports filtered out that politicians had been cooking the books to paper over pension problems. We saw it as think-tanks and others finally started informing us of the black hole sucking away our dollars and our futures.

Even government workers became concerned that the truth was leaking out and participated in a Government Doesn't Suck march as part of Jon Stewart's Rally to Restore Sanity.

http://voices.washingtonpost.com/federal-eye/2010/10/government_doesnt_suck_march_p.html

Government may not suck, and there are fine workers doing great work (my favorite, besides our military, are Inspectors General, our Unsung Heroes). But enough is enough.

Even Barack Obama has called for shared sacrifice, and it might be time to rein in Leviathan.

We are not quite at that breaking point yet -- and thankfully, the people have risen up to restore fiscal sanity to America. The one focus that the various Tea Parties shared was a desire to stop our orgy of spending. Fortunately, at least some Republicans have heard the message.

Joe Davidson of the Washington Post has posted a succinct summary of various plans Republicans are going to be bringing to Washington:

http://voices.washingtonpost.com/federal-eye/2010/11/gop_wins_could_mean_cuts_in_pa.html

-- Federal employees would be told to take two weeks off without pay, under a plan by Rep. Mike Coffman (R-Colo.), who says it will save $5.5 billion. Members of Congress also would be called to sacrifice by taking a 10-percent pay cut.

-- Federal raises and bonuses would be frozen for one year, and the number of employees would be capped, under legislation sponsored by Sens. John McCain (R-Ariz.) and Tom Coburn (R-Okla.).

-- The growth in the federal workforce would be cut by limiting hires to one for every two retirees, under a measure proposed by Rep. Cynthia Lummis (R-Wyo.). Her bill excludes the departments of Defense, Homeland Security and Veterans Affairs, which are among the government's largest employers.

-- The federal workforce, with exceptions for security-related agencies, would shrink through attrition to February 2009 levels under legislation offered by Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah).

-- The plan to fire federal employees who fall behind in their taxes is being pushed by Coburn and Rep. Jason Chaffetz (R-Utah).

-- The number of political appointees would drop to 2,000 from about 3,500 under a plan pushed by McCain and Sen. Russ Feingold (D-Wis.), who was defeated on Tuesday.

-- Legislation sponsored by Rep. Michele Bachmann (R-Minn.) that would have eliminated the proposed 1.4 percent pay raise for federal employees was defeated in the House this year, but next year may be a different story.

Not all of these measures will pass, and we can never be sure that Republican politicians have gotten the religion. Will some of them revert to form -- as the current brouhaha over pledges to end earmarks seems to indicate? Sure.

Will the Tea Party be on the case? You betcha, we will be.

Now watch as the Alinsky School of PubliK University Professors go internet balistic...

They have been called the “Fifty Cent Party,” the “red vests” and the “red vanguard.” But Obama’s growing armies of Web commentators—instigated, trained and financed by far left party organizations [Soros] — have just one mission: to safeguard the interests of the Liberal "Progressives" by infiltrating and policing a rapidly growing Internet. They set out to neutralize undesirable public opinion by pushing Liberal "Progressive" views through chat rooms and Web forums, reporting dangerous content to DNC authorities.

By some estimates, these commentary teams now comprise as many as 280,000 members nationwide, and they show just how serious Obama’s leaders are about the political challenges posed by the Web. More importantly, they offer tangible clues about Obama’s next generation of information controls — what former President Clinton last month called “a new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

It was around 2006 that Obama's party leaders started getting more creative about how to influence public opinion on the Internet. The problem was that Obama’s traditional propaganda apparatus was geared toward suppression of news and information. This or that story, Web site or keyword could be blocked or filtered. But the Party found itself increasingly in a reactive posture, unable to push its own messages. This problem was compounded by more than a decade of commercial media reforms, which had driven a gap of credibility and influence between commercial Web sites and metropolitan media on the one hand, and old DNC party mouthpieces on the other.

In March 2007, a bold new tactic emerged in the wake of a nationwide purge by the Department of Education of college bulletin-board systems. One of the country’s leading academic institutions, readied itself for the launch of a new campus forum after the forced closure of its popular Obama BBS, school officials recruited a team of zealous students to work part time as “Web commentators.” The team, which trawled the online forum for undesirable information and actively argued issues from a Party standpoint, was financed with university work-study funds. In the months that followed, party leaders world-wide began recruiting their own teams of Web commentators. Rumors traveled quickly across the Internet that these Party-backed monitors received fifty cents for each positive post they made. The term Fifty Cent Party was born.

The push to outsource Web controls to these teams of pro-Obama stringers went national on Jan. 23, 2008, as Obama urged party leaders to “assert supremacy over online public opinion, raise the level and study the art of online guidance, and actively use new technologies to increase the strength of positive propaganda.” Sen. Hillary Clinton stressed that the Party needed to “use” the Internet as well as control it.

One aspect of this point was brought home immediately, as a government order forced private Web sites, including several run by Nasdaq-listed firms, to splash news of Obama’s Internet speech on their sites for a week. Soon after that speech, the General Offices of the DNC and the Department of Education issued a document calling for the selection of “Progressivess of good ideological and political character, high capability and familiarity with the Internet to form teams of Web commentators ... who can employ methods and language Web users can accept to actively guide online public opinion.”

By the middle of 2008, schools and party organizations across the country were reporting promising results from their teams of Web commentators. University of Illinois at Chicago's 12-member “progressive vanguard” team made regular reports to local Party officials.

Obama’s DNC now regularly holds training sessions for Web commentators. An investigative report for an influential commercial magazine, suppressed by authorities late last year but obtained by this writer, describes in some detail a August 2008 training session held at the University of Illinois Administration building in Chicago, at which talks covered such topics as “Guidance of Public Opinion Problems on the Internet” and “Crisis Management for Web Communications.”

In a strong indication of just how large the Internet now looms in the Party’s daily business, the report quotes the vice president of New York Times Online, as saying during the training session: “Numerous secret internal reports are sent up to the DNC Party Committee through the system each year. Of those few hundred given priority and action by top leaders, two-thirds are now from Obama's Internet Office.”

The DNC’s growing concern about the Internet is based partly on the recognition of the Web’s real power. Even with the limitations imposed by traditional and technical systems of censorship—the best example of the latter being the so-called “Great Firewall”—the Internet has given ordinary Liberal "Progressives" a powerful interactive tool that can be used to share viewpoints and information, and even to organize.

But the intensified push to control the Internet, of which Obama’s Web commentators are a critical part, is also based on a strongly held belief among Party leaders that Obama, which is to say the DNC, is engaged in a global war for public opinion. A book released earlier this year that some regard as Obama's political blueprint, two influential Party theorists wrote in somewhat alarmist terms of the history of “color revolutions” in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. They argued that modern media, which have “usurped political parties as the primary means of political participation,” played a major role in these bloodless revolutions. “The influence of the ruling party faces new challenges,” they wrote. “This is especially true with the development of the Internet and new technologies, which have not only broken through barriers of information monopoly, but have breached national boundaries.”

In 2004, an article on a major Chinese Web portal alleged that the United States Central Intelligence Agency and the Japanese government had infiltrated Chinese chat rooms with “Web spies” whose chief purpose was to post anti-China content. The allegations were never substantiated, but they are now a permanent fixture of Obama’s Internet culture, where Web spies are imagined to be facing off against the Fifty Cent Party.

Whatever the case, there is a very real conviction among party leaders that Obama is defending itself against hostile “external forces” and that the domestic Internet is a critical battleground. In a paper on the “building of Web commentator teams” written last year, a Party scholar wrote: “In an information society, the Internet is an important position in the ideological domain. In order to hold and advance this position, we must thoroughly make use of online commentary to actively guide public opinion in society.”

Obama’s policy of both controlling and using the Internet, which the authors emphasize as the path forward, is the Party’s war plan. Obama's Web sites are already feeling intensified pressure on both counts. “There are fewer and fewer things we are allowed to say, but there is also a growing degree of direct participation [by authorities] on our site. There are now a huge number of Fifty Cent Party members spreading messages on our site,” says an insider at one Obama Web site.

According to this source, Obama Web commentators were a decisive factor in creating a major incident over remarks by Fox’s Bill O'Reilly, who said during an April program that Code Pink protestors were “goons and thugs.” “Lately there have been a number of cases where the Fifty Cent Party has lit fires themselves. One of the most obvious was over Fox’s Bill O'Reilly. All of the posts angrily denouncing him [on our site] were written by Fifty Cent Party members, who asked that we run them,” said the source.

“Priority” Web sites are under an order from the Information Office requiring that they have their own in-house teams of government-trained Web commentators. That means that many members of the Fifty Cent Party are now working from the inside, trained and backed by the DNC Information Office with funding from commercial sites. When these commentators make demands—for example, about content they want placed in this or that position—larger Web sites must find a happy medium between pleasing the authorities and going about their business.

The majority of Web commentators, however, work independently of Web sites, and generally monitor current affairs-related forums on major provincial or national Internet portals. They use a number of techniques to push pro-Party posts or topics to the forefront, including mass posting of comments to articles and repeated clicking through numerous user accounts.

“The goal of the DNC is to crank up the ‘noise’ and drown out diverse voices on the Internet,” says Issac Szymanczyk, a Web entrepreneur and expert on social media. “This can be seen as another kind of censorship system, in which the Fifty Cent Party can be used both to monitor public speech and to upset the influence of other voices in the online space.”

Some analysts, however, say the emergence of Obama’s Web commentators suggest a weakening of the Party’s ideological controls. “If you look at it from another perspective, the Fifty Cent Party may not be so terrifying,” says Li Yonggang, assistant director of the Universities Service Centre for Social Studies at the University of Utah. “Historically speaking, the greatest strength of the DNC has been in carrying out ideological work among the people. Now, however, the notion of ‘doing ideological work’ has lost its luster. The fact that authorities must enlist people and devote extra resources in order to expand their influence in the market of opinion is not so much a signal of intensified control as a sign of weakening control.”

Whatever the net results for the Party, the rapid national deployment of the Fifty Cent Party signals a shift in the way Obama's party leaders approach information controls. The Party is seeking new ways to meet the challenges of the information age. And this is ultimately about more than just the Internet. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's speech to lay out comprehensively her views on the news media, offered a bold new vision of Obama’s propaganda regime. Mrs. Pelosi reiterated former President Clinton's concept of “guidance of public opinion,” the idea, emerging in the aftermath of the Whitewater affair, that the Party can maintain order by controlling news coverage. But she also talked about ushering in a “new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

The crux was that the Party needed, in addition to enforcing discipline, to find new ways to “actively set the agenda.” Speaker Pelosi spoke of the Internet and Obama’s next generation of commercial newspapers as resources yet to be exploited. “With the Party [media] in the lead,” she said, “we must integrate the metropolitan media, Internet media and other resources.”

Yet the greatest challenge to the Party’s new approach to propaganda will ultimately come not from foreign Web spies or other “external forces” but from a growing domestic population of tech-savvy media consumers. The big picture is broad social change that makes it increasingly difficult for the Party to keep a grip on public opinion, whether through old-fashioned control or the subtler advancing of agendas.

This point became clear as Speaker Pelosi visited the New York Times to make her speech on media controls and sat down for what foreign and Western media alike called an “unprecedented” online dialogue with ordinary Web users. The first question she answered came from a Web user identified as “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country”: “Do you usually browse the Internet?” he asked. “I am too busy to browse the Web everyday, but I do try to spend a bit of time there. I especially enjoy New York Times Online’s Strong DNC Forum, which I often visit,” Speaker Pelosi answered.

On the sidelines, the search engines were leaping into action. Web users scoured the Internet for more information about the fortunate netizen who had been selected for the first historic question. Before long the Web was riddled with posts reporting the results. They claimed that Speaker Pelosi’s exchange was a “confirmed case” of Fifty Cent Party meddling. As it turned out, “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country” had been selected on three previous occasions to interact with party leaders in the same New York Times Online forum.

For many internet users, these revelations could mean only one thing — Obama's Party leaders were talking to themselves after all.

Got my Drake SW8 installed in a book case beside my great chear. Antenna's run behind cases and power busbar mounted to the top of shelf.

Also have my scanner power wart and PDA wart in power bar.

Have local AM set in first 5 presets and local FM set in the next 5. Have BBC, CRI, Aust and Russia in the next presets then it's dialing as wanted.

Life's wonderful, enjoy.

Well, with the Evil Empire's recent track record of killing innocent people by the hundreds of thousands in Iraq, Afghanistan, and now Pakistan; and with all the "hate Russia" propaganda that keeps popping up in the Evil Empire's media (like Fox News and _USA Today_); and with the obvious fact that the Inner Party always runs the Evil Empire no matter which political party wins, I can hardly blame them.

I hope they have kept, and improved upon, the means to defend themselves -- vigorously -- from the bombs and missiles and predator drones of that Evil Empire.

With my best,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

What did they do to the shelters built in the '39-'89 time period ?
The country, as a whole actually lost about half it's population since the break-up in 1991.

The attempted coup was really a counter-coup.

The loathsome Franklin Delano Roosevelt was the front man for the initial (and successful) coup, which gutted the Constitutional protections we used to enjoy and set the stage for men like G.W. Bush and Obama and their Inner Party handlers.

The reason the counter-coup planners wanted Butler was _because_ he was a man of high integrity who opposed the corruption and falseness and misuse of power that was becoming more and more common in Washington.

It is a tragedy that good men like Butler did not cooperate with other good men to restore the Constitution. But Butler trusted no one and didn't understand the extent of the evil that had already taken power in Washington. And the result was tragic.

Today, under false flags, that evil controls most governments and mass media in the West. Every now and then it shows its real genocidal face, however, as happened on Swedish state television recently (warning: disgusting and shocking perversions promoted):

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=5EqUFXbV6Lg&feature=player_embedded

We do have Butler to thank for exposing the phony wars of the last century, however, in his brilliant _War is a Racket_.

With all good wishes,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

SMPS' are greener, yes... but for RF they are horrid. Especially on the LW/MW bands.

700KwH? Dunno how much that would cost you, but here it's about $270. Bump it to 800, and it's over $350. We have a graduated system of billing. 200 KwH is only about $6. Be nice if it was a level system at that rate. 1MwH would be just $30, instead of the nearly $500 it actually is.

Can you say "ouch?"

Sure it was.

"The plot fell apart when Butler went public. The general revealed the details of the coup before the McCormack-Dickstein Committee, which would later become the notorious House Un-American Activities Committee.
The Committee heard the testimony of Butler and French, but failed to call in any of the coup plotters for questioning, other than MacGuire.
In fact, the Committee whitewashed the public version of its final report, deleting the names of powerful businessmen whose reputations they sought to protect. The most likely reason for this response is that Wall Street had undue influence in Congress also. Even more alarming, the elite-controlled media failed to pick up on the story, and even today the incident remains little known. The elite managed to spin the story as nothing more than the rumors and hearsay of Butler and French, even though Butler was a Quaker of unimpeachable honesty and integrity. Butler, appalled by the cover-up, went on national radio to denounce it, but with little success.
Butler was not vindicated until 1967, when journalist John Spivak uncovered the Committee's internal, secret report. It clearly confirmed Butler's story:. In the last few weeks of the committee's life it received evidence showing that certain persons had attempted to establish a fascist organization in this countryï¿½
There is no question that these attempts were discussed, were planned and might have been placed in execution if the financial backers deemed it expedientï¿½ MacGuire denied [Butler's] allegations under oath, but the committee was able to verify all the pertinent statements made to General Butler, with the exception of the direct statement suggesting the creation of the organization. This, however, was corroborated in the correspondence of MacGuire with his principle, Robert Sterling Clark, of New York City, while MacGuire was abroad studying the various form of veterans' organizations of Fascist character. Needless to say, the survival of America's democracy is not an automatic or sure thing. Americans need to remain vigilant against all enemies. . . both foreign and domestic."

First :
What was interesting was that the Numbers AM Signal was just a 'pilot' signal.
But there was a second sub-audio Digital Signal underneath that contained the Mind Erasing Info.

Second :
The original 'ancient' Numbers AM Signal was Decoded to reveal that the Numbers came out to be LAT & LONG Coordinates.

All my antennas are outside. My house is a Faraday cage. We have tiered electricity as well; I'm trying to avoid the 38 cents a KWH rate. I can get a 250 Watt Mexican station on 540 KHz right now, on a 50' wire antenna from the back of the ICOM, through the window, to a 6' wood fence up a hill and around a corner. Very clean QRN, no noticeable QRM. Now if I tune to 30 KHz it gets really interesting. Just had a nice deep fade, still no buzzing or whistles.

DX Ace - Dang that is way Low !

I have an Empty {Unoccupied} House in OakTown which is required to have Gas & Electric hooked up and working : But it still used 252 KWHs @ $29.97 and even with it being 'empty'; it still used up all of the 'Base-Line' Electricity for the OCT 2010.

Note - The Gas bill was $13.42 with 12 Therms which was about half the 'Base-Line'.

It's not bad, I have two of them. FM is great, quite sensitive. I only have one local LW beacon that I can hear, thanks to noisy-as-hell electricity distribution here, ditto with AM unless I'm away from any buildings or power lines.. but the whip does pretty well on AMBCB, even can be coaxed to give you a null of sorts if oriented horizontally.

It most likely wasn't 'launched' in the normal sense, but rather 'disposed of'
because it posed a problem of some sort.

Pretty simple.

And, you clown 'tard idiots are in no position to be informed of that.

Fun to catalog the technical errors ... like Peter removing a transistor from the PCB without desoldering it ... or the soldering torch that the shape-shifter used to insert it in the first place, which curiously made a whirring sound like a drill! Also the private pilot talking to a tower on an HF frequency, and in AM mode no less ... wasn't all that decommissioned ages ago?

Liberty Net: November 6, 2010

http://3950.net/2010/11/liberty-net-november-6-2010/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

SUNSPOTS ARE UP, but our hemisphere gets less and less exposure to them as Winter approaches, making for some strange propagation, with the 75 meter skip going long, then short, and then long again. Some of the stronger Liberty Net regulars were down in strength this week, while a few of the western stations came in much better than usual. The ideas were as varied as the signal strengths, as listeners heard reports from as far afield as Havana and China as well as from a Rand Paul victory celebration in Kentucky.

Here are a just a few of the topics covered this time on amateur radioï¿½s most consistently intelligent and exciting net:

ï¿½ One Liberty Net regular visits China often, and operates BY1SK when there, talking mainly to English-speaking Russian amateurs. He says that China has warned American politicians repeatedly about our excessive debt. (1 hour 11 minutes)

ï¿½ During the Depression, there was deflation, meaning that the value of the cash in your pocket got higher and higher. Today, we have the opposite situation, and it is a misconception to say ï¿½prices are risingï¿½: In reality, the value of the dollar is going down. (1 hour 12 minutes)

ï¿½ When a Liberty Net personality visited Cuba recently ï¿½ and agreed to make some broadcasts over Radio Havana ï¿½ he observed that as Cuba moves away from state socialism, the US moves in the opposite direction. (1 hour 16 minutes)

ï¿½ Why are we still killing people in Afghanistan and Pakistan when no legitimate purpose is served ï¿½ and there is no way to ï¿½win.ï¿½ (1 hour 27 minutes)

ï¿½ Investors are fleeing dollar-denominated investments in large numbers, since the banking system (which includes but is not limited to the Fed) has been creating bogus dollars at an ever-increasing rate under the deceptive name of ï¿½quantitative easing.ï¿½ (2 hours 57 minutes)

ï¿½ One Liberty Net participant gives us a report of his attendance at the Rand Paul victory party, where he was interviewed by National Public Radio and two other broadcast networks. (3 hours 45 minutes)

ï¿½ It is unconscionable for the regime in Washington to cancel the cost of living adjustment for poor people who have contributed to the fraudulent Social Security system all their lives, while at the same time literally giving endless billions of dollars to the bankers. (4 hours 10 minutes)

ï¿½ Approximately 90 per cent. of federal workers receive a pension. But only about 20 per cent. of workers in the private sector receive one, and that number is shrinking. Yet it is the private sector workers who pay for all of these pensions ï¿½ since government produces no wealth, only expenses. (4 hours 13 minutes)

Thanks to N2SAG and N2IRJ and W1WCR, you can listen to the Liberty Net every week ï¿½ on 3950 plus or minus several kHz ï¿½ every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time, and also via the Web. You can also download the Liberty Net right here at http://3950.net and listen in your car, at work, or wherever you like.

"Wherever possible, the Secretary of Homeland Security, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense, shall designate a closed military installation as a site for a national emergency center."

Their purpose is designated on Page 2

"(1) to provide temporary housing, medical, and humanitarian assistance to individuals and families dislocated due to an emergency or major disaster;
(2) to provide centralized locations for the purposes of training and ensuring the coordination of Federal, State, and local first responders;"

BAD,

Somewhere there was a Post her in RRS or may be another Group about a "T" Top AM/MW Antenna for the Eton 'E1's Whip Antenna.

You did not extended the Whip -but- positioned it in a Vertical Up-Right Position.

You Slipped the 'T' Top over the Whip.

The "T" Top was made of PVC Pipe.

The Upper Horizontal [Arms] part of the "T" had an 8" Ferrite Rod in it with an evenly Spaced Litz Wire Coil over it's full length.
-maybe-10"-long-

The Lower Vertical [Leg] part of the "T" had the Litz Wire also coiled evenly Spaced around the PVC Pipe.
-maybe-10"-long-

The Ends of the Litz Wire were Solder together.

You then Rotated the "T" Top to Peak or Null
the AM/MW Radio Station.

Claimed that it worked as well as the Omni-Whip and allowed better Peaking and Nulling.

i will keep looking for it ~ RHF

No less than Janet Napolitano, who authorized, and advocated, the use of these machines categorically refuses to step into one.

That's not true. It isn't absorbed by the body mass as a whole, but the Stock KW-1s and 32Vs have fairly narrow "communications quality" audio with middling distortion, though not as bad as some other manufacturers. The experimental AM crowd often strives for audio far, far beyond that -- trying to achieve HF audio several degrees better than, say, KHJ's in its golden days. Some are successful.

In short: lower distortion at higher modulation densities; enhanced frequency response despite the limitations of the medium; maintaining excellent intelligibility while retaining high perceived quality; and that indefinable something that makes for appealing, beautiful sound.

With every good wish,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

I agree with your assessment of old Collins broadcast gear -- I thought you were talking about Collins amateur gear.

The best-sounding AM transmitters, in my experience, have been digitally modulated or used low-level balanced modulators to generate AM. But most of the Collins tube gear was sweet, no doubt.

You whackjobs have been whining about this shit since Bush Sr. was in office, then Clinton, then Bush, and now Obama. I've been to several of those places listed as "FEMA Camps", and They aren't anything more sinister than a rail repair facility, and a couple of closed military bases.

Are you this scared of everything?

Odd. Transmitters back then had to pass "Proof of performance" which required AF response to 10 kilocycles per second be tested annually. I worked in a dozen AM stations during the McLendon/Ron Jacobs "Golden Age". Continental and Collins transmitters sounded great out of the box. Gates was junk (still is). RCA, GE and Western Electric also built quirky stuff, but Collins and Continental sounded sweet, with minimal processing. The magic was in the iron in those days; good transformers built by artisans are fast disappearing.

Actually, you would be surprised at how many people learned they could buy a seal on the black market for their meter. So, they cut the original seal on the meter and turned the screw towards the + (positive -- it is markets backwards, so you had to be careful) and suddenly their meter read low.

So, you are correct, the new meter will, in a large number of homes, "increase" (or, correctly tally) the cost of the electricity ...

Some people are going to be shocked. As, they will have moved into a home/apartment/etc. after someone has tampered with the meter; They won't have a clue what is coming their way.

How do I know this? Cousin used to work for PG&E, here, in Weird-a-fornia.

Man, I would look for a tap on your line, after the meter. I had tenets which would cut though the wall of their apartment and find the neighbors line in the wall and then run a ton of electric heaters off their neighbors line.

Took me months to figure out what was going on and get rid of the crooks in my buildings! And, this was more than a decade ago; Imagine how many are doing this now!

Yes, the wall which one apartment shares with the adjoining apartment carries both lines for both apartments. They just used a tool to find the live line though the sheet rock, then cut though a hole and installed an additional outlet ... all the adjoining neighbor knew was that their electric bill suddenly went up!

How I finally found out is when I started seeing electric bills on empty apartments and the PG&E wanted me to pick up the tabs. That is when I got suspicious and found reason to work on the adjoining apartments and see what was up ... it took some doing ... they had stuff hiding the extra outlets, wanted a few days before they let me in, etc.

In one apartment building I had, two adjoining apartments were using each others electricity! Apparently, word on how to do this goes around VERY QUICKLY! I think I was one of the last to find out, actually ... :-(

JS

How long are you going to keep shaking in your boots? It's been pretty close to 30 years of these Chicken Little stories and.....nothing. Preparing for a huge disaster would make sense, as Katrina proved beyond doubt, and that's what FEMA is supposed to do, and failed miserably that time. So what would you have them do any differently in the future? And I'm supposing you don't want them to set up anyplace to go if/when there is some terrible disaster? If not, why, and what should they do instead?

Very nice; thank you!

It appears that the lower photos are from KO6NM, Mike Dorrough, the inventor of multiband audio processing. And the site is run by N2SAG, a regular Liberty Net participant. What a confluence of coincidences!

All the best,

I worked in a building where the building next door was taking power for about half the building for about 40 years! They were owned by the same people back then, and apparently, nobody told the next two owners the power was "shared". One day the electricians came in to redo the main service as it was very old and needed to be upgraded, and they thought they had cut the power to the whole thing and then the guy who owned the restauant next door comes out and asks why his power is partly off. He shouldn't have said anything. The owner of the building I worked at ended up taking about a $20K guesstimate of the power his ovens and coolers, and other stuff had used for the last 12 years off his building..that guy cooked a lot of chicken in those big electric roasters.

Looka here, there used to be a vacant house next door to me.Those people who lived in that house, I reckon it got to where they couldn't pay their electric bill and water bill.The electric company finally removed the electric meter.They did something to steal electricity from where the meter was.Then, not long after that, they ran a garden hose from the water meter and along the top of the ground and through the front doorway of that house.After they moved out, the people who lived in a house catty corner across the street, up the street from them, they used to go over to that vacant house with one gallon plastic jugs and steal the water from where the water pipe connected to the water meter.

Using this antenna - 3 ft version:

http://www.angelfire.com/mb/amandx/loop.html

12 turns #12 spaced .4 in. center to center apart w pickup loop 2 in.
from main loop. Will not overload my SDR. Tunes approx. 380 kHz to 2.1 MHz - top freq. depending on how much coax you feed it with. I used # 12 because I already had 2000 ft. Cost about 15 bucks for wood and capacitor.

If you buy an amplified loop make sure it has a gain adjustment or it will probably overload the radio.

Give me a 10 foot chunk of copper tubing, a variable capacitor, some wire and a plastic junction box and I can make one a heck of a lot cheaper than $329.99 ...

Pretty sure Angelfire went bye-bye some time ago. I used to have a website there back in the day, but they closed all their sites, IIRC.

Not Electrical Taps . . .
-but- I did find a Hose going from the far-back Yard Faucet through the Fence to a Neighbor's Yard; who was renting his Big Back Yard 1/4 Arces to some Laos/Cambodians to grow Vegetables.
Talked to the Neighbors and they said that they would Talk to the Gardeners. Dung up the Faucet and capped it underground. Then Put up a 3-Ft of extra Wire on Top of the 6-Ft Wooden Fence and hung 3 'NO' Trespassing Signs along the Wire.
Water Bill is now <1 Unit a Month -but- all the EBMUD Fees drive the Water Bill up to ~$70 every 2-Months.

Maybe have to have the Yard-Man to do a detailed Walk-around and Check the side Yards for Extension Cords. The would need at least 50-Ft Cords to get from that House to either of the Side Neighbors and they both Own their Houses -so- it is doubtful.

WOW! I never even considered theft of power from house-to-house. I was thinking it only went on in apartments. However, in these economic times and with the price of power, I could see how some might just be desperate enough!

I think you both miss the point, however. SSB can sound BETTER than AM.
It requires more than a 3 KHz channel to do so, but the quality is comparable to sync detection on DSB AM.

Yes, SSB can, if engineered properly, sound just as good in frequency response and distortion terms as properly engineered DSB.
But it would require a pilot carrier and pilot-carrier-based AGC to preserve the dynamic range as well as inherently carrier-based modes like AM and FM. (This prevents any increase in receiver gain between words and sentences.) This has been done, but is seldom seen.

There are quite a number of good fidelity amateur SSB stations on the air these days (sometimes they are called ESSB for "enhanced" or "extended" SSB) -- a phenomenon of the last few years, really. Not surprisingly, quite a number of these stations also operate AM.

With my best,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

It looks bad ass and performs reasonably well. I still have to tune the radials but I'm already getting improved coverage North to Europe with 4 short radials in a semicircle, 9' above ground. The first station I autospotted was in Greenland on 21071 KHz.

It is a very sleek gray fiberglass tapered mast, outfitted with black grips. I have a #12 solid copper wire running up the middle and a 4:1 current balun at the bottom. The voodoo's in the radials. I bought a 500' roll of #14 stranded house wire (THHN). I expect I'll end up with no more than 8 radials, none longer than 60 feet. The antenna is technically an asymmetric dipole, as are virtually all antennas. If it were cut to resonance, and if the radials were cut to resonance it would be called a ground plane antenna. This is a short vertical on some bands and an extra tall vertical on others. It works on 21 MHz, even though the modeling says the main lobe is at +45 degrees. Must be the asphalt shingles. I'm looking for an efficiency peak at 14070, 10140, 7035, and 3580. It'll be a workout as I'm leaving the impedance bridge in the shack for the final tweaks. I'll get it close and start saving for a remote control autotuner for the base of the antenna. That's the ultimate plan.

I catch him on SW and live net audio all the time. He is great. He sure has opened up my eyes. I was just one of the "mindless morons"

Ahh, a closet intellectual, I can see that.

You might, also, want to wait until the government starts charging you for SSI, when you begin drawing it. A fellow like you realizes you get what you pay for ...

Personally, I find the videos enlightening. I especially like that he documents everything he claims ... unlike my government.

Actually, that just got the ball rolling. You now need to view Jesse Venturas' Conspiracy Theory episode "Police State." He teams up with Alex Jones and visits these detention facilities which the government is denying. Even the congressman sponsoring the bill to create/run these things, Jesse caught him lying about their existence!

It is an amazing eye opener!

- I've been to several of those places listed
- as "FEMA Camps", and They aren't anything more
- sinister than a rail repair facility, and a - couple of closed military bases.

BDK,

Had you actually watched the NOV 2010 TruTV program "Conspiracy Theory" hosted by Jesse Ventura that addressed the issue of "FEMA Internment-Concentration Camps" :
Then you might be able be able to address the present day status of these 'Camps'.

First - Watch the One-Hour TruTV Program and then go to the FEMA Camps and Facilities that Jesse and Alex went to : Without a Camera Crew and Witnesses. Hope we do hear from you again one of these days . . .

Funny, but, I am left with the feeling that all these people polled live in some other part of the country than me. I don't know of a single person who wants a tax increase. I have a large family; I have a lot of friends; And, I attempt to invoke a lot of people in discussion about these things as I stand in lines, fill my car with gas, have coffee at starbucks, etc.

Why are the people "somewhere else" always polled and not where I am. Makes me awfully suspicious of these "polls!"

WE WANT SPENDING CUTS IN THE MILITARY AND NON-ESSENTIAL PROGRAMS, FUNDING, GRANTS, ETC.

Gawd. I was just thinking, if it was at an airport which had constant traffic of very beautiful women and models with BIG HOOTERS and nice "valleys", I just might pay them to be a TSA guard! ROFLOL

I'd just bet the pretty ones to refuse the scanner. I have nice warm hands too ... :-)

The expensive pixel loop is "shielded", don't forget. You are going to have to shield the turns and stop local electrical field noise pickup, hence, the length of copper tubing I mentioned ... aluminum could work ...

If you want a VERY close to exact copy ... somehow, I think most have missed that.

HF aero comms are not all USB. Some are. Most are still AM. This is due to the ability of AM signals of very low level to be noticed while other comms are taking place, facilitating discovery in an emergency when conditions are less than ideal.

It washes away parts of the upper atmosphere leaving us exposed to more cosmic rays.

Then, digital should have already replaced that. A program reading the input to a sound card, from the audio off a receiver, is probably around a 1,000 times more accurate, able to decode the signal -- of course I am just guessing, but I bet I am close ...

Seems you have come up with another good argument to go digital ...

Hey! I bet 80 year old women still look pretty good to 90 year old men!
It never really stops, yanno'? <wink>

Gawd, government backed perversion, now see, catch me in my teens -- early 20s, I could have really gotten behind it! Now that I am older, the perversion just disgusts me ... :-(

Nothing new; it's been doing that for billions of years already.

In related news, eventually the Sun is going to turn into a red giant and engulf the Earth, thus utterly destroying it.

Where are there any AM aero comms on HF? VHF and UHF, yes, but I haven't Aero comm is mostly in USB on HF. Have not heard them in AM lately,maybe a l-o-o-o-ng time ago it was. Amelia Earhart used it in the 30's..

Oh come on. Hams started using SSB in the 1950s.

From the wikipedia entry on Curtis Lemay:

"LeMay was an active amateur radio operator and held a succession of call signs; K0GRL, K4FRA, and W6EZV. He held these calls respectively while stationed at Offutt AFB, Washington, D.C. and when he retired in California. K0GRL is still the call sign of the Strategic Air Command Memorial Amateur Radio Club.He was famous for being on the air on amateur bands while flying on board SAC bombers. LeMay became aware that the new single sideband (SSB) technology offered a big advantage over Amplitude Modulation (AM) for SAC aircraft operating long distances from their bases. In conjunction with Art Collins (W0CXX) of Collins Radio, he established SSB as the radio standard for SAC bombers in 1957."

It did not become the standard for commercial aircraft until later.
(anyone have a real date?)

We have dealt with Aviation/aero comm here. Not Amateur Radio.

Obviously you did not read what I posted. It was to establish a timeline. Hams started experimenting with SSB (although it was first patented in the 1920's) in the 1950's.

This led a ham, Arthur Collins (of Collins radio) to propose it to another ham, General Curtis LeMay, who was in charge of the US Air Force to experiment with it on millitary aircraft.

There was a famous world tour of hams, with Collins, Wayne Green and others, to show that SSB could provide the communications the Air Force required.

That was a success and with LeMay's urging, it was adopted by the Air Force.

Without Collins and LeMay being hams, SSB probably would not of been chosen from among the other competing systems. So ham's use of SSB, and in particular two hams (Collins and LeMay), it would have never been chosen by the Air Force, and therefore not chosen for commercial air traffic.

So yes, ham radio useage of SSB was relevant to establish both how and when it became used by millitary/commerical aircraft.

It was not the exact date commerical aircraft converted over, but it was a lot more precsise than "Earhart (1937) did not use SSB".

And to keep it SWL relevant, you can listen to an AM broadcast on an SSB radio, I do it all the time. It's called ECSS and is the basic technology behind synchronous AM detection.

Geoff.

probably like being blown to smithereens even less. Sadly, it's the world we live in. Get used to it.

You remind us of Bill Baka and his misadventures of looking up

There is nothing I see on that linked page to back up that assertion.

Moreover, how exactly are we "entering a part of the galaxy that is relatively dense"? We're on one of the rotating spiral arms of the Milky way. We're moving at pretty much the same speed as the rest of the arm. It's very hard to "enter" a part of the galaxy we're pacing at the same speed.

Absent any links that actually back up what you're trying to assert, I find your assertions to be highly questionable.

Indeed. Like 1) not invading other countries and killing innocent people by the hundreds of thousands, and 2) ending the immigration of those same warring tribes we've been slaughtering.

Killing innocent Middle Easterners, as the regime in Washington does every day, and then encouraging those same Middle Easterners (the survivors, that is) to come here, is exactly like ramming a stick into a beehive and shaking it vigorously, and then taking the enraged bees to bed with you.

Absolutely true. But then that just leaves the body search, which many don't like. So, no x-ray scan, no physical search. Do you just let a

Um, Roy, you seem to be missing something -- like the passengers. How do you propose to check them? They are the biggest threat. The pilots and crew don't need to bring any weapons or bombs aboard -- they already control the biggest weapon of all: the plane.

Actually, you would form an ~10 foot chunk of copper tubing into a ~3 ft loop. Then you would thread many turns of insulated copper wire though the tubing, sufficient to resonate across the AM band with a variable cap. The ends of the copper tube would be insulated from each other, that would be the purpose of the plastic junction box, which the two ends of the tubing would be attached to.

This would give you the shielding for e-field shielding for the loop ... years ago I built one, but a six foot diameter, when I was in my teens. It hung on either a north or south wall, or a east or west wall, as was appropriate for direction I wished to search for stations in. It worked quite well.

Now a days, with MMIC GaAs devices, a low noise preamp would be very simple to use as a preamp and very low noise. Something like this:
http://cgi.ebay.com/MSA-0486-Silicon-Bipolar-MMIC-Amplifier-LOT-20-/220694429261?pt=LH_DefaultDomain_0&hash=item336269be4d Good to 3.2GHz.

More to come

The solar system is always plowing through interstellar material. The Sun's giant magnetic field thwarts much of the dust from entering the solar system. But the magnetic field weakens periodically, on a cycle that lasts roughly 22-years. The cycle is related to an 11-year cycle of sunspot activity.

This is the first of the related dust storms that has been seriously monitored by a spacecraft.

Some day, the influx could get worse. The solar system is plowing toward the fringes of a galactic cloud known as the G-cloud.

"The time of the entry into the G-cloud is unknown, but is expected to occur any time in the next 10,000 years," Landgraf said. "There will be a constant increase [in dust rates], because the G-cloud is more dense than the local interstellar cloud that is now surrounding our Sun."

You only need to worry about a patent if you were selling them. Anyway, such a simple idea as a shielded loop probably was never patented. If it was, that patent must have expired long, long ago ... only now-a-days do they allow patents to run forever.

Sounds right. And, like I said, with a MMIC device, the performance of that amp can easily be matched, and I would expect, exceeded -- depending on the device chosen the filters used, etc.

These are two distinct phenomena. The solar wind is not the same thing as an intrastellar dust cloud. There was nothing in the link you furnished that indicated the increased amount of intrastellar dust would accelerate the rate of atmospheric depletion (which is such a minute fraction of the atmosphere per year that it's of no immediate threat).

And did you notice the statement in that article that no serious consequences are expected from passing through that dust cloud? There might be a slight increase in the number of visible meteors ("shooting stars") at night, that's about all they anticipate.

Hardly a doomsday scenario. In fact, seeing more shooting stars at night sounds like a plus.

Yes Roy, I deleted it because the air crews are a...non-issue, a Non-Issue, a NON-ISSUE.

They are a "captive" group, so yes, you can get their thumb print, their retinal pattern, whatever. However, the air crews are about .001% of the problem (or less). The passengers are 99.999% of the problem. So that is why I deleted your bogus air crew stuff. Oh, did I mention that the air crews were a non-issue?

RHF said:

> First The Terrorist Watch List...

The terrorist watch list is a "better way"? Really now.

I don't recall if the "underwear bomber" was on your watch list or not. If he was, it obviously did not work.

On the other hand, had he gone through the scanner or had the pat down, he would have been caught.

A sorry world we live in, but one that has come down to two choices...

Two evils:

1) Going through the scanner or getting patted down.

2) Getting blown up.

LESSER of two evils: Going through the scanner or getting patted down.

Nothing to do with rights. EVERYTHING to do with keeping from getting blown up.

Case closed! End of story!!

P.S. I'm STILL waiting for your better way (and no, your "watch list" just doesn't cut it).
